The dogfight was typical of battles that raged within the AD AGE 500, from the whole to its parts. The 500 charted the continued erosion in advertising in the U.S. Domestic billings dropped for the second consecutive year, although worldwide billings grew—a transformation made possible by overseas growth. Within the Ad Age 500, there was considerable belt-tightening by U.S. agencies as they cut back employment—also a factor of agency consolidation at the top. Traditional media, particularly network TV, continued to lose dollars to below-the-line spending. And the 500's regional competition for ad dollars heated up.

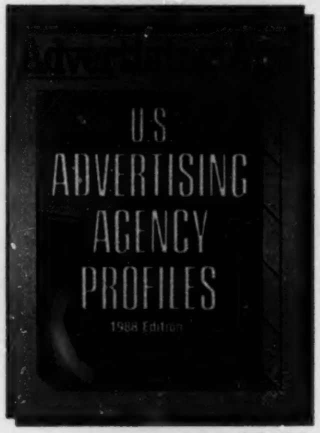
The AA 500, comprising the nation's leading advertising agencies, grew 10% in worldwide gross income to $9.6 billion while U.S. gross income dropped a precarious 4.6% to $6.2 billion. Worldwide billings grew 9.7% to $65.7 billion, and U.S. billings declined 4.1% to $43 billion. (See chart on Page 64.)

These totals compare the AD AGE 500 with a different set of agencies that comprised the 500 last year. However, comparing the component agencies in this year's 500 with their prior-year figures offers more encouraging results. Worldwide gross income and billings were each about 13.6% higher than the same group of agencies reported for 1986. Still, within the totals are found U.S. gross income of $6.2 billion on billings of $43 billion for percentage gains of 6% and 7.2%, respectively. Expansion abroad and exchange rate mechanics produced $3.4 billion in foreign gross income, up 31.8%, on billings of $22.7 billion, up 28%. Foreign billings as a result grew as a percentage of total billings from 30% to 34.6% for agencies in this year's AA 500.

Results from the two sets of figures—on one hand, the comparison of the new 500 to last year's 500 (a different set of agencies), and on the other, this year's 500 as a comparison with its own growth from last year—seem contradictory.

But it should be noted that 21 agencies ranked between 100 and 200 in last year's report did not report this year. Agencies new to the list this year made up only part of those lost billings, indicating that inclusion of those agencies would have softened the year-to-year decline of the 500. However, agencies provide various reasons for not reporting, and often it's because of depressed numbers.

The results are even more chilling for the ad community when comparing this year's top 25 with results of the 1986 top 25—a difference of four agencies, all at the bottom of the 25. The top 25 has recorded declines in U.S. billings and income for two consecutive years, while its worldwide totals have gathered strength. Part of the explanation for the U.S. decline is that merged agencies are seldom as big as the sum of their parts, and this group has led the merger movement.



Jeffrey Toth

During 1987, the top 25 accounted for 55% of the 500's U.S. billings and 99% of the foreign. This averaged out to 70% of the 500's worldwide billings. Clearly, foreign billings were the catalyst for growth, recording $22.4 billion, up 37.9% from prior-year totals for the top 25. This compares with the top 25's domestic billings of $23.5 billion, down 6.1% from prior-year totals.

The decline of the dollar against major currencies was the biggest influence on foreign growth. Prior-year foreign returns were not restated to reflect current exchange rates.

Sweet 16

Among the leaders in this year's report emerged the ad community's answer to the NCAA's "Sweet 16" in 1987. Membership in the agency world's exclusive "Sweet 16 Club" is enjoyed by agencies with at least $1 billion in worldwide billings—ranging from Y&R with $4.9 billion, to N W Ayer, whose acquisition of C&W Group last year helped boost its billings to $1.2 billion. Most of the 40 agency acquisitions of U.S. agencies recorded among the top 100 were among these $1 billion heavy-hitters.

This elite corps rewrote the book on mergers, starting with No. 2 Saatchi & Saatchi Advertising Worldwide and followed by its sister agency under the Saatchi & Saatchi PLC parent umbrella—Backer Spielvogel Bates Worldwide, No. 3. BSB is the product of last year's No. 3 Ted Bates Worldwide and No. 24 Backer & Spielvogel. Rankings are by worldwide gross income.

BBDO Worldwide, fresh from its merger into the Omnicom Group in 1986, climbed to No. 4 from No. 6 in 1986. Its overseas network carried the growth. Foreign billings at BBDO rose 23.1%, as U.S. billings rose only 6.5%.

Ogilvy & Mather Worldwide collected strong returns abroad to buttress a 4.8%

U.S. ad income dips 4.6%

Among the media kingpins, Leo Burnett funneled most of its strong U.S. billings gains into network TV where it spent $675.4 million to best runner-up Saatchi & Saatchi Advertising Worldwide with $638 million.

growth at home and retain its No. 5 position. McCann-Erickson Worldwide moved up a notch to No. 6 on the basis of strong overseas growth and domestic acquisitions, including the year-end buyout of the U.S. portion of last year's No. 39, Geers Gross Advertising.

The award for perseverance goes to J. Walter Thompson Co. for surviving a buyout by WPP Group PLC, wholesale management turnover and a slew of departing clients. Worldwide billings at JWT eked out a 2.6% gain—the product of a 13.6% gain abroad compared with a 6.4% drop in U.S. billings.

Lintas:Worldwide, No. 8, forced its way up the ladder with its 41.1% growth in foreign billings from the Lintas network and the domestic merger of last year's No. 13 SSC&B:Lintas Worldwide with 1986's No. 19 Campbell-Ewald Worldwide, both within the Interpublic Group of Cos.

D'Arcy Masius Benton & Bowles retained its No. 9 ranking, and Leo Burnett Co. rose from No. 12 to No. 10, virtually in a dead heat with No. 11 Grey Advertising. Chicago-based Burnett, the only "outside" agency to crack the New York-dominated top 10, had U.S. billings growth of 13.8%—one of the strongest performances by any of the top agencies.

There were 19 new entries in this year's top 100 chart, although five were name changes caused by mergers, including No. 14 HDM, the product of the merger of last year's No. 17 HCM and No. 28 DYR Worldwide. HDM is one-third owned by Young & Rubicam. AC&R/DHB & Bess, No. 35, is a new Saatchi & Saatchi PLC agency transformed from last year's Nos. 65, 81 and 91—AC&R Advertising, Diener/Hauser/Bates Co. and Sawdon & Bess Advertising, respectively.

Strong performances pushed most of the other new entries onto the list. Two medical agencies and Thomas G. Ferguson Associates (79) and Vicom/FCB (89)—reported U.S. billings gains of 36.1% and 51.3%.

Media struggles

Media billings grew to $28.8 billion, up 3.9% from 1986, according to the 442 agencies that broke out media. A number of larger agencies do not break out media. As it was, media totals represented 67% of total U.S. billings capitalized, down from 70% in 1986 among the same set of agencies. Materials and services and fee income are other revenue streams that comprise capitalized billings.

Network TV expenditures of $8.25 billion represented about 28.6% of the media placed by the 442, down from 30% in 1986; spot TV accounted for $6.86 billion, or 23.8% of all media, up from 23.1% in 1986; magazines totaled $4.1 billion, or 14.1% of all media, down from 14.4%; newspapers totaled $3 billion or 10.3%, up from 9.8%, and direct response recorded billings of $2.1 billion, or 8.3% of the total, up from 7.6%.

Among the media kingpins, Leo Burnett funneled most of its strong U.S. billings gains into network TV where it spent $675.4 million to best runner-up Saatchi & Saatchi Advertising Worldwide with $638 million. Among top 10 agencies in network TV billings, four reported spending declines.

Network TV took a beating, dropping 0.7% from the prior year. Total network TV billings in the U.S. is estimated at $8.83 billion, according to Robert J. Coen, McCann-Erickson. The 500 placed 93% of that.

Saatchi & Saatchi dominated the spot TV billings chart with $520.5 million vs. $356 million for runner-up Y&R. Saatchi also grabbed the magazine lead with $251.9 million vs. $200.9 million for No. 2 in the category, Leo Burnett; J. Walter Thompson led newspaper billings with $171.3 million vs. $133.6 million for Nationwide Advertising Service.

Direct response continued to be the fastest growing media sector. Ogilvy & Mather Direct Response, which includes O&M's A. Eicoff & Co., nosed out Y&R's Wunderman Worldwide, $260 million to $259.9 million, for No. 1.

Regional ad competition

Regional ad performances followed overall economic patterns governing major ad markets. New York agencies account for about one out of every two dollars spent by agencies in the U.S. Its overall billings were $19.7 billion, up 7.3%, placing it well ahead of No. 2, Chicago, with $5.1 billion, up 7.2%.

Los Angeles, recording a nominal growth of 4.8% to $2.8 billion, held off a fast-closing Detroit where billings jumped 9.8% to $2.6 billion. San Francisco billings increased only 2% to $1.3 billion. Tightly packed into the next three positions were Dallas, Boston and Minneapolis. Dallas seems most vulnerable to a drop in ranking, recording only 2% growth to $897.6 million. Boston grew 8.4% to $859.3 million and Minneapolis 13.5% to $815.4 million. Philadelphia kept its No. 9 spot with $743.4 million, up 14.7%—the largest increase among the top 10.

Only Atlanta, with $468.1 million, dropped from last year's top 10 as total billings fell 2.3% to $468.1 million. The biggest agencies in Atlanta consolidated in 1987 and Cleveland thus slipped into 10th place with $595.3 million, up 12.7%. Advertising growth in the cities is based on comparative years for this year's agencies.

Employment/productivity

Merger activity and the slowed economy heavily affected employment among the 500. Forty of the top 100 agencies declined in employment.

The top 25 in particular showed merger footprints—redundancies and streamlined operations. While personnel totals for the 500 rose 4.9% to 124,847 worldwide and 2.7% to 73,106 in the U.S., the top 25 dropped 0.9% on the domestic side to 39,487 although mustering a 3.9% gain worldwide to 91,027. Not all the 500 report employment totals.

Some of the bigger agencies had to deliver pink slips during the year, including J. Walter Thompson Co., which pared its employment rolls by 17.4%, FCB, which cut its staff by 9.9%, Bozell, Jacobs, Kenyon & Eckhardt by 10.7% and HDM by 30.8%.

These troubling payroll cuts on Madison or Michigan Avenues had a positive impact on productivity as measured by employees per $1 million in U.S. billings, because 73 of the 100 reported productivity improvement.

Heading the 100 in productivity was Towne, Silverstein, Rotter, where 0.54 employees produced $1 million in billings. This compares with 0.69 in 1986 for the agency which pared its staff from 56 in 1986 to 45 in 1987.

Avrett, Free & Ginsberg ranked second at 0.65, was slightly less productive than the prior year when it ranked No. 1 with 0.63 employees per $1 million in billings.

Within the top 10 in productivity, two of the hottest shops, Fallon McElligott and Hal Riney & Partners, showed why they are hot. Both showed strong productivity gains—Fallon by 13% to 0.89 and Riney by 23% to 0.93—despite increasing employment. Fallon's staff grew by 17.6% and Riney's by 37%.

PR's influence

Public relations, once a support service within advertising agencies, has broadened not only into a profit center but in many cases into a stand-alone highly independent entity within the larger agency network.

PR fees folded into agency income totals can be substantial—in the top 10 agencies they contributed $221.2 million in 1987, equivalent to $1.48 billion on the billings side when capitalized. Capitalizing treats fees as if they were the 15% media commission by factoring up the fees by a 6.67 multiplier to arrive at a billings equivalent.

The practice of including the fees in agency gross income is debatable. Saatchi & Saatchi PLC, the agency holding company, gains extensive PR fees from Rowlands but does not fold them into agency totals because it seeks a media-only generated gross income and billings. This runs counter to the practice of many agencies who strive to be "seamless" by offering one-stop shopping for a whole assortment of advertising, marketing and communications needs. PR is considered one of those integrated, "seamless" services.

Aside from the philosophical issues, PR has the power to juggle the top six rankings in worldwide gross income. Excluding PR income, Young & Rubicam is most affected on the chart. It owns Burson-Marsteller, which contributed $137.2 million in fees to Y&R worldwide gross income in 1987. Without those fees, Y&R would drop to No. 3 in worldwide gross income. Moving past it into the top spot is Saatchi & Saatchi Advertising Worldwide, followed by Backer Spielvogel Bates Worldwide, neither of which include PR.

BBDO Worldwide would remain No. 4 in worldwide gross income despite including $22.7 million in PR fees from Doremus Porter Novelli. Ogilvy & Mather Worldwide would yield its No. 5 ranking to McCann-Erickson Worldwide because O&M PR includes $25.9 million in fees in its ad total.

Agency mega groups

Until last year, the headlines announcing mega-acquisitions within the ad industry often contained the teaser—"the British are coming"—as a reference to Saatchi & Saatchi PLC's storming of Madison Avenue. In 1987, the British arrived—in triplicate.

Saatchi & Saatchi PLC again made the group holding company race a one-horse affair in reporting $1.7 billion in gross income on $11.4 billion in billings, a figure that includes non-media capitalized fees. But two other British entities—WPP Group PLC, No. 4 in worldwide gross income, and WCRS/Belier, No. 6—claimed sizable U.S. territory for the first time.

WPP, a little fish even in British territorial waters, swallowed up last year's fourth largest agency mega group, JWT Group, in a $566 million buyout. Considerable fallout resulted, however. Clients spilled from JWT and two weeks ago, six principals left Lord, Geller, Federico, Einstein, an independent agency within the old JWT Group, to form Lord, Einstein, O'Neill & Partners. WPP quickly slapped a suit on the new agency in an effort to prevent it from soliciting WPP clients.

Interpublic Group of Cos. grew 20.7% in worldwide gross income to remain No. 2 at $992.9 million on billings of $6.6 billion. Omnicom Group was No. 3 at $895.5 million, up 9.2%, on worldwide billings of $5.8 billion. WPP's fourth place finish was based on $892.5 million in worldwide gross income on $6 billion in billings. Ogilvy Group was No. 5 with $723.9 million in gross income, up 31.9%, on billings of $5 billion.

WCRS finished sixth with $230.2 million in worldwide gross income on billings of $1.6 billion. WCRS's major U.S. properties are HBM/Creamer and Della, Femina, Travisano & Partners, agencies ranked No. 32 and 38, respectively, in worldwide gross income in this report.

Agency brands

Saatchi & Saatchi Advertising Worldwide supplanted J. Walter Thompson as the leading agency by U.S. "brand" name with $1.7 billion in U.S. billings. The "brand" agency is arrived at by unbundling subsidiaries from the core agency.

Saatchi & Saatchi's core agency grew 16% in U.S. billings from the prior year on a historic basis which treats current-year composition as if it existed in the prior year. Saatchi & Saatchi's core shop bears the Saatchi & Saatchi/DFS logo. Leo Burnett finished a strong No. 2 as it did in 1986 with $1.6 billion in U.S. billings, up 13.8%. J. Walter Thompson had only 0.5% growth to $1.5 billion, dropping to No. 3. The only other major swing among the top 10 core shops was Ogilvy & Mather. It dropped from No. 5 a year ago to No. 10 with $1.1 billion in U.S. billings, up only 1.6%.

PR chart correction

Doremus Porter Novelli contributed pr income of $22.7 million to BBDO Worldwide, reducing BBDO's worldwide gross income without pr to $514.3 million. This does not change its No. 4 ranking on the Page 77 chart that shows PR's influence on the top 10 agencies.

Key to profile information

Data in agency profiles was obtained from agencies that received and completed a questionnaire prepared by ADVERTISING AGE.

Agencies were asked to provide gross income and total volume, the latter identified as the sum of media billings, billings to the client for materials and services and capitalized fees—a method of equating fees to billings by treating the raw fee as if it were the 15% commission the agency earned by billing an amount 6.67 times the raw fee.

Gross income in the traditional agency structure is the sum of the 15% commission earned from the media billings, the markup (usually 17.65%) for materials and services billed the client, and the raw fee. Where the agency profile states gross income as an estimate, it was provided by ADVERTISING AGE.

AD AGE again provided a geographic breakout of agency billings. When agencies did not comply with this request made in the questionnaire, their regional billings were estimated whenever possible and they were contacted about the estimates.

This year marked the fourth year in which agencies provided verification from an independent accountant for figures they reported. Those agencies providing a signature were noted in this issue by a check mark within a box in the profile of the agency.

Compliance has improved measurably. Four years ago, one-third of the agencies complied; this year AD AGE achieved 60% compliance.

The statement of verification follows:

> The undersigned, acting as outside accountant for the agency, confirms that the U.S. income figure indicated above for the year 1987 reflects totals as entered on the books of the company for the period reported.

Several variations of this statement were accepted including a more formal letter written in 1984 by the New York State Society of CPAs under the direction of Gene F. Gaughan, chairman of the advertising committee of the society.

Footnotes to tables & graphs and directory of ranked subsidiaries

By KEVIN BROWN

The practice of allowing agencies to "double-dip" their subsidiaries makes compilations hazardous from the editor's end, and perhaps confusing to the reader.

Double-dipping is a tradition permitting parent advertising agencies to include the billings and income of subsidiaries in the parent totals by which agencies are ranked. At the same time, the subsidiaries are ranked based on their own lesser totals, in the same ranking as the parent.

In pulling totals, averages or other analytical data from the mound of information available in this issue, double-dipped subsidiaries must be marked so their totals won't be counted twice—once in the parent totals, and separately as a subsidiary.

This can be confusing given the fact that all subsidiaries are not double-dipped for various reasons, some are double-dipped in the current year but not in the prior year, and some, like HDM, have only a portion of their totals folded into the parent—in this case one-third into Young & Rubicam, which shares ownership with Eurocom in Paris and Dentsu Inc. in Japan.

The following methodologies were used in preparing the tables, charts and totals for this issue.

Gross income ranking

The main ranking in this issue, listed in Section I, contains 500 agencies. If an agency is double-dipped it will contain the parent company in which its totals were merged in parenthesis following its name. If an agency is an obvious subsidiary but does not contain the parent in parenthesis, it was not reported in the parent's consolidated totals.

For example, Levine, Huntley, Schmidt & Beaver is a subsidiary of Grey Advertising but it does not have (Grey) after its name. This indicates LHS&B is not carried in Grey totals.

These parent companies are not to be confused with agency mega groups covered on Pages 92 and 93.

The following table lists parents' initials, the full name by which the parent is ranked, and any of its subsidiaries ranked in this issue and consolidated in its totals:

Unless otherwise noted, this list applies only to tables in Section I.

Also, in the Section III profiles on the top 100 agencies, the composition of an agency's U.S. totals is broken out not only by billings per office but by offices of the parent's subsidiaries if included in the parent's totals.

Billed media rankings

Throughout the issue, 16 charts rank agencies by billings in various media. In each table, billings of the subsidiaries listed above are subtracted from the parent companies' billings in that medium.

This policy exists because the tables—which list only the top 10 agencies in each media category—would be unnecessarily repetitious

Annual Review

Dropping the MCA from its agency name, Ally & Gargano, the wholly owned subsidiary of Marketing Corp. of America, Westport, Conn., produced a 1.4% increase in billings after a 10.3% decline in 1986. New clientele adding to this gain include Cadbury-Schweppes and its Motts products, Holland House brands and Rose's Lime Juice ($12 million), Showtime ($10 million) and Pfizer's Ben Gay products ($8 million). Major loss was Federal Express' $20 million account snatched by Fallon McElligott. Also lost were Ciba-Geigy ($5 million) and Stroh's ($4 million). A 10-15% growth is projected for 1988 mainly from new product introductions from existing clients.

The top 100 agencies account for 87.4% of worldwide gross income of the Advertising Age 500. Beginning on this page is an alphabetical listing of these agencies. They are numerically ranked in Section I beginning on Page 6. Their billings by media are carried in Section II beginning on Page 18.

Annual Review

The revolving door turned at A&P in 1987 as the account for Reebok came in and then exited (it was resigned), echoing a similar pattern experienced in 1986 when two major clients worth $15 million in annualized billings between them came and went. Billings were up 13.3% and two new service offices were opened in San Ramone, Calif., and Washington, D.C. New accounts amounted to an annualized $42 million. The agency expects a 15% increase in 1988 from a mix of new business and increased internal billings.

Champion Advertising Co., headquartered in St. Louis, answered a questionnaire sent to the agency by AD AGE in late December. If the editors had not heard from Champion by the questionnaire filing deadline in late January, they sent a second mailing to the agency. If there was still no response and Champion Advertising had gross income of $5 million or more, the agency was telephoned for a response.

The ✓ in the boxtop means the agency received the signature of an independent accountant verifying gross income figures supplied to AD AGE. See Page 4 for more information.

U.S. billings breakdown defines how an agency spends the clients' monies. The breakdown is provided in dollars ($000,000).

Most office billings breakouts were supplied by agencies. Where they did not respond, agencies were asked to confirm AD AGE estimates based on published reports on individual markets and other criteria. For the most part, those who did not provide the necessary information responded to the estimates.

Financial data are collected for gross income and billings and are in millions of dollars.

- Gross income: Agencies are ranked by gross income, which gives a better indication of an agency's size than billings. Gross income generally is the sum of three sources: The 15% an agency makes from buying media: a 17.65% markup for materials and services billed the client, and the fee charged the client—a form of remuneration popular with clients whose media market is low-cost in comparison with more costly media like tv or consumer magazines.
- Billings: Billings is short for "capitalized billings" and represents the sum of three types of agency activity: Total commissionable billings for ad space and time; gross billings to clients for materials like artwork, research and so on for services when supplied or performed by organizations other than the agency, and capitalized fees. Fees are capitalized by multiplying fees by 6.67. This makes an equivalent of fee income and commissions from media billings. For example, if commissions from media are 15%, then commissions multiplied by 6.67 would be the total media placed (6.67 is the quotient of 100 divided by 15).

AD AGE based annual reviews on returned questionnaires and interviews with agency executives.

Annual Review

A 48.2% increase in foreign billings helped propell the agency to a 6.5% gain in worldwide billings. On the U.S. side however, billings dropped 3.9% influenced partially by the loss of the $85 million U.S. Army account, and by flat returns from C&W Group, bought from Mickelberry Corp. C&W returns were folded into 1986 figures for comparitive purposes. In New York, the two big shops of Ayer and C&W were merged. Ayer Pacific, serving Los Angeles, San Francisco and Irvine, Calif., inherited C&W shop, Reiser Williams deYong. The one-year-old Houston Ayer shop became full-service. Its big account is Houston-based Continental Airlines. Forecast for 1988 is for a 20% increase in billings mainly because of the recently acquired $200 million Burger King account.

Annual Review

The agency was formed from the merger of Backer & Spielvogel with Ted Bates Worldwide both purchased by Saatchi & Saatchi PLC. It produced worldwide billings growth of 17.6%—solely from the non-U.S. activities of the Bates network overseas when comparing 1987 to a historic reading for 1986. Non-U.S. billings grew 37.5% compared with a decline of 0.4% in the U.S. Few accounts were lost because of conflicts arising from the merger. They included Panasonic ($20 million annualized) and Helene Curtis ($15 million). Major growth in Australia along with added new business in Germany, Scandinavia and Denmark contributed as well as the $331 million in billings picked up from the merger of Dorland U.K. into non-U.S. operations. In March 1988, the London Dorland office combined with BSB there forming BSB/Dorland. Returns for subsidiaries Kobs & Brady, a direct marketing agency, AC&R/DHB&Bess and Campbell-Mithun are included in BSB totals. Not included are those of William Esty Co., once part of Ted Bates Worldwide. Esty is an independent agency in the Saatchi network.

Annual Review

The small 2.3% increase in billings was influenced largely by a loss of $55.6 million business including Zale Jewelry, Kraft, Del Taco and Maybelline, and the continuing impact of the loss of the Anheuser-Busch beverage division in late 1986. Bloom added $13.2 million from new clients, highlighted by Church's Fried Chicken ($12 million), Dallas Convention & Visitors Bureau ($1.5 million) and Airwick. The agency forecasts 10-15% growth based on these new clients and a perception that advertisers are increasingly being attracted to medium-sized agencies because their accounts are serviced by top management.

million), Florida State Lottery ($15 million), Quantum Chemicals, formerly National Distillers ($10 million), Firestone Rubber & Tire ($10 million) and the Elanco Animal Division of Eli Lilly ($10 million). Burton-Campbell brought $22.4 million in billings to EPB figures for 1987, Spiro & Associates $53 million and KKB $10 million. The agency added $13.5 million from new clients, growth from existing business totaled $11.5 million—a composite of increased budgets from Roy Rogers, Scudader Clark & Stevens, Freddie Mac and US Air—and lost business cost the agency $3.8 million. Annual Review

Continuing its traditional pattern, the agency incurred 95% of its billings growth from increased ad budgets of existing clients. In the U.S., 22 new assignments from eight of its clients were added. The one account gained was from Black & Decker and is worth an estimated $10 million. Three accounts left—Memteck Products ($3 million) and RCA ($15 million) were resigned, and M&M/Mars departed because of conflict with other Burnett client H.J. Heinz.

Internationally, 184 assignments in 38 countries from 11 clients were added, mostly from Kellogg and Procter & Gamble, including their Richardson-Vicks division. New business came from BASF and Abbott Laboratories.

The agency's internal direct marketing unit has done better than expected as it handled eleven clients in 1987. The new in-house hispanic marketing unit is expected to grow more slowly.

Execs at Cabot are "bullish" about 1988 following an 18.6% growth in billings in 1987, representing $8.9 million in new business and $3.8 million in new billings from existing clients. Projections are for billings to reach the $100-120 million range based on new business such as the recently won Canadian Paper Co. and several other pitches in which the agency has been shortlisted. No client losses affected 1987 figures, however, one setback, effective January, 1988, was the loss of the $4.1 million New England Apple account.

Losing the $28 million Pizza Hut account and the $21 million Porsche business didn't hold down growth at this agency which gained Nissan ($150 million annualized), National Car Rental ($13 million), Reebok ($22 million) and Royal Caribbean Cruise Lines ($15 million). Growth from Pizza Hut ($6.7 million) before its departure, World of Wonder ($18.7 million) and NYNEX ($6.7 million) boosted totals, but spending bottomed out for California Cooler which pared $8 million from its budget. Management changes accommodated new growth. In New York, senior-VP Jane Newman was named exec VP-general manager. In San Francisco, chief operating officer Fred Goldberg was promoted to president-CEO and Matt Crisci went to senior VP-general manager. Bob Wolfe, the New York general manager was named president-CEO of the L.A. office.

When Showtime/The Movie Channel scrambled, so did we.

Stephan W. Schulte
Sr. Vice President, Direct Broadcast Development
Showtime/The Movie Channel Inc.

"We knew that when we started scrambling our satellite transmissions, there was a potential of over a million and a half homeowners with earth stations who would immediately want to know how to unscramble them.

"To be prepared to deliver that information we had to deal with the company that had the capability of handling five thousand calls, fifty thousand calls, or half a million calls on very short notice.

"And that's why we went to WATS Marketing of America.

"With the potential of receiving so many viewer calls, we were very concerned about the customer's ability to get through and have a responsive, cooperative operator at the other end of the line. WATS could handle it.

"And it's an ongoing relationship, because as more of the channels on the satellite scramble, the number of inquiries will continue to increase."

Helping clients reach marketing objectives. That's our goal at WATS Marketing of America. No one has more experience and no one gets results like we do.

Bulk of the healthy 36.3% increase in billings at this sales-promotion subsidiary of D'Arcy Masius Benton & Bowles came from $22.2 million in new business, particularly American Tobacco Co. ($5.7 million annualized) and Hubbell Inc. ($6.1 million). Existing budgets were down $1 million in the aggregate and lost business totaled $3.8 million. The new client base should push up billings by 10% in 1988.

Annual Review

The agency suffered a decline of 3.8% in billings worldwide mainly because of the loss of non-U.S. business from the sale of its Vancouver office to Scali, McCabe, Sloves. Adding to that was the loss of billings from the Los Angeles and San Francisco offices, both of which were sold. The agency further explains decreases as a result of problems affecting all Seattle shops because of a perceived weaker creative image, keen competition from California and Oregon shops and a threatening 7.5% state service ad tax. On the account side, the Apple Commission account ($6 million), held for 26 years, was lost, but C&W picked up three new accounts including Diet Center ($6 million). Clark Kokich resigned as executive VP-general manager of the Seattle office and Jim Capacino, who was hired away from Livingston & Co. as a key senior VP-creative director, resigned months later to freelance.

CMF&Z's 5.4% growth came partly from industrial and consumer accounts and partly from its pr division but only nominally from its area of specialization—agribusiness. Restructuring occurred in February, 1988, as three major divisions were formed. They are CMF&Z Cedar Rapids, CMF&Z Des Moines and CMF&Z Public Relations, each headed by newly named presidents. The new setup is designed to enhance service and to create and sustain client business and agency growth.

Annual Review

Dailey had hoped to reach $150 million in billings in 1987, but dropped 19.8% to $112.8 million mainly because of the loss, effective midyear, of Western Airlines ($25 million), which was merged with Delta. This year looks significantly better. New accounts gained included California State Lottery ($30 million) and Naugles Restaurants ($8 million) and budget increases from Beatrice, Carnation and Honda will take effect throughout the year helping to push up billings. The agency also had a small increase in staff despite the poor showing in anticipation of new business presently being pitched.

Annual Review

A worldwide billings growth of 11.5% materialized from an increase of 4.2% on the domestic level and 21.2% overseas. In the U.S., a 9.1% growth in billings from the New York office and 21.2% growth in Detroit offset losses in Chicago, St. Louis and San Francisco. D'Arcy has become P&G's No. 1 agency, as a result of the $35 million newly acquired business overseas from Richardson-Vicks. A 12% increase in billings is forecasted for 1988, buttressed by expansion in overseas operations and new accounts. D'Arcy folds in returns from subsidiaries Medicus International and Manning Selvage & Lee into its totals.

Annual Review

The "Mac Tonight" commercial move from regional co-op to national by McDonald's Corp. brought recognition to the agency in 1987. That greater exposure and anticipated new business on the West Coast could push billings up 10% in 1988, says the agency. For 1987, the modest 3% increase in billings largely reflected the loss of the $9.5 million Toyota Dealers Assn. account which resulted in the closing of the Maryland office. Business was stronger on the West Coast where the Los Angeles office increased billings by 12.8% and hispanic subsidiary, Ferrar/Ad America, was opened. New business totaled $5.5 million in 1987 while $7.9 million was gained from existing accounts.

Annual Review

Worldwide billings climbed 1.8% in 1987, the agency's first full year of operation, heavily weighted toward overseas business. Non-U.S. billings rose 26.9% compared with a decline of 5.2% domestically. Strength overseas came from favorable conversion rates, a combination of major agency consolidations in Europe and Asia-Pacific, acquisition of additional interests in Italy and Australia and new business wins including Bayer, Cote D'Or, Euromarche and Reebok. Domestically, new business measured $55.5 million and increased budgets another $171.4 million, however, $260.8 million resulted in lost business, much of it related to conflicts arising out of the merger of Doyle Dane Bernbach Group and Needham Harper Worldwide. Three divisions were formed in 1987, each with its own president. Girvin, Conrad & Girvin was acquired and the DDB Needham Retail Network was established with this agency as its core. Healthy growth overseas should continue in 1988 due to new business.

Annual Review

Billings growth leveled off at 8% after a 37% increase in 1986 which largely reflected the purchase of Response Communications. New business, highlighted by The Travelers, Wells Fargo Bank, American Express, First National Bank and U.S. Navy Resale Services, pushed up billings $8.6 million. Increases from Bell Atlantic, First Fidelity Bank and Prudential Insurance played a major role in producing an $8.5 million increase from existing clients. A negative $6 million was attributed to the loss of Sitmar Cruises and Bambergers accounts.

Annual Review

Billings growth of 14.5% came largely from increased spending from existing accounts—mainly Neutrogena, Pennzoil and Price Pfister. New accounts added $2.2 million, with Hiram Walker the largest.

Only $900,000 was lost—from resigned account Fujitsu Ten, and from Olga Co., removed after its corporate buyout by Warnaco. Anticipated new brand assignments from Hiram Walker and growth from the new Giorgio Perfume account that was re-assigned from new owner Avon Products, bode well for 1988.

Agency Review

The agency, which became part of Saatchi & Saatchi PLC when its parent, Ted Bates Worldwide, was purchased in late 1986, used its Saatchi connections to gain the Jeep/Eagle account and a Detroit office in 1987 that kept billings from dropping by a precarious 55%. Later when AMC merged with Chrysler, Chrysler elected to retain Esty for the Jeep/Eagle div business. As it was, billings nosedived 38.2%. The agency, now under the leadership of Joseph O'Donnell, who was ousted from J. Walter Thompson Co. in January, 1987, when he proposed a management buyout of JWT, got the Detroit account from Saatchi & Saatchi Compton N.Y. when that agency merged with DFS Dorland Worldwide, a big Toyota agency (Lexus). Other big losses included Nissan ($140 million annualized), MasterCard ($40 million), which it resigned rather than compete in an agency review, and Chesebrough-Pond's ($50-$75 million), which Procter & Gamble which employs many of the Saatchi network agencies. Movement is expected to be upward in 1988 especially with the $100 million annualized billings from Jeep/Eagle and Brown & Williamson($35 million).

Annual Review

New business worth $18 million and growth from existing clients helped to offset $11 million in lost business as the agency turned in a 4.8% increase in billings in 1987. Added to the client list were Pizza Hut for Arizona, New Mexico & Nevada ($2 million), Aristech Chemical Corp. ($1.7 million), Viacom Cable ($1.5 million), National Honey Board ($1.5 million) and Larsen Beef ($1 million). Account losses came from Pilgrims Pride Inc. ($2.6 million), Straw Hat Pizza ($3 million), Vail Associates ($1.5 million) and AMC Cooperatives ($1.5 million), the latter lost as a result of AMC's merger with Chrysler. Only a 5% net growth in billings is expected for 1988, largely because of poor economic conditions in key markets. And full-year returns from acquisitions in San Francisco (Busse & Cummins, 1988), Alaska (Bean Marriott, 1987) and Dallas (AFSC, 1987) should more than balance out the closing this year of the Atlanta office.

Experiencing a modest 4.1% growth in billings, increases came almost entirely from the Southeast division. New business totaled $4.7 million, while existing business, largely from NAPA, Bank ONE, Elanco, Drumstick and McDonald's, grew by $5.9 million—a total matched by lost business. Growth from a 10% billings increase projection in 1988 will come

Annual Review

The acquisition of the Federal Express, Timex and Porsche accounts as well as growth from US West, Continental Bank and Lee Jeans highlighted 1987's performance resulting in a 52.7% increase in billings and 18% increase in staff. Major account losses came from Heath candy and Med Centers. Although the loss of the US West account in early 1988 will cause decreases, billings from new accounts acquired in late 1987 are expected to balance that, and lead to 5% to 10% growth in 1988.

Annual Review

Agency growth came from non-U.S. operations which increased 24.6% in billings compared with a 0.7% growth in U.S. billings. Overall billings growth measured in at 6.7%. Consolidated figures in 1987 did not include three subsidiaries that reported in 1986—North Castle & Partners, Carl Byoir & Associates and Deutsch, Shea & Evans, all of which were sold. Agency business in 1988 is expected to grow 12% domestically, stimulated by full-year returns from the acquisition of Krupp/Taylor USA, merged into FCB Direct in the fourth quarter, and from anticipated growth from existing clients.

Annual Review

Grey returned another year of healthy growth—up 19.4% worldwide, largely fueled by a 43.1% increase overseas as Grey continues to enlarge its network of specialized communications services and overseas agencies in order to offer clients an intergrated marketing program. Domestic billings were boosted mostly from additional assignments from BankAmerica Corp., Borden's Pasta Group, General Foods, Panasonic, P&G and Stroh's. New business was healthy and losses were comparatively minor. The agency sold Grey Chicago in December, 1987, to GGK Holding, Basel, Switzerland, and its name was changed to HCF & Lois/GGK. The Chicago figures are included in Grey totals. Grey does not consolidate totals for subsidiaries not 100% owned. The agency is hesitant to forecast 1988 because of what it terms the uncertain economic climate in the U.S. This includes two big subsidiaries, Gross Townsend Frank Hoffman and Levine, Huntley, Schmidt & Beaver.

Annual Review

Growth is projected at 15% in billings in 1988, on par with the worldwide increase of 16.4% in 1987, a year in which no accounts were lost. New business in 1987 totaled $14.8 million, including Commodore Business Machines ($7.8 million) and Stride Rite ($3 million). A new London shop that opened to service international accounts for Hasbro and Playskool added $5.3 million. Existing accounts grew by $8.6 million. Projections are high for 1988 because of $20 million in new business from Milton Bradley and Hasbro effective Jan. 1, new assignments from Keystone Camera and Miles Laboratories' S.O.S. brands, and growth from the U.K. sector.

Annual Review

HDM (Havas Dentsu Marsteller) resulted from the marriage, July, 1987, of DYR, owned equally by Young & Rubicam and Tokyo-based Dentsu, and HCM (Havas Conseil Marsteller), owned 51% by Paris-based Eurocom and 49% by Y&R. The merger was a result of Y&R's desire to cut expenses of expanding separate global networks. HDM unites basically a European and American network (HCM) with an Asian/Pacific partner (DYR). Continued expansion to better serve clients outside the U.S. is a major priority in 1988. In the U.S., both merging agencies had down years. DYR, in fact, closed its New York shop not long after Canon, its big client there, pulled its business out of DYR. A major management realignment took place in Los Angeles operations, where the DYR office was merged with the HCM office, and in Chicago where HCM, merged with Dawson Johns & Black in March, 1987, becoming HDM Dawson Johns & Black. Chairman of the management team heading HDM is Alain de Pouzelhac, a director of Paris-based Eurocom. He was head of HCM Europe. Tim Pollack, who took over as head of DYR after Alexander Brody left, became ceo. Shinzo Ueno is area director in southeast Asia as he was for DYR, and Alain Rousset remains cfo as he was at HCM.

Annual Review

Billings were down 11.9% because of significant reductions from major clients totaling $10.9 million. Lost business measured in at $3.4 million mostly from the elimination of ad budgets on imported beer and wines caused by the falling value of the dollar. The agency also reduced its staff by 16%. New business amounted to $4.8 million, and should help boost 1988 billings a conservative 5%.

Annual Review

Specializing in recruitment and classified advertising, this Omnicom Group agency that is part of Diversified Agency Services had a 30% billings increase in the U.S. and added $2.9 million in billings from its three non-U.S. offices. The agency, which has 23 offices in the U.S., anticipates a much quieter 1988 with estimates set at 3% to 4% growth because of a decline in billings from financial services clients, its bread and butter. Agency figures are consolidated in totals for DDB Needham Worldwide.

Annual Review

Growth of 15% in billings disguises the fact that in 1986 only 10 months of returns were recorded for Ingalls, bought by Quinn & Johnson that year. A full year of returns from Ingalls would put growth at less than 1%. Current accounts added $8.3 million in billings, including $1.2 million from Nissan Dealers Assn., $2.4 million from Converse and $3.4 million from TJ Maxx. New business grew by $14.7 million, including $7.3 million from Ocean Spray Cranberries ($16 million annualized) and $2.6 million from Arkwright. Losses of $11.2 million came from Massachusetts Division of Tourism ($4.5 million annualized) and Zayre Corp. ($14.8 million). The agency would not project billings growth for 1988, but reported budgets from existing clients were on the upswing. IQ&J is part of Diversified Agency Services at Omnicom Group.

English agency actually retreats

Geers Gross was originally founded in London. More recently the agency entered the New York market to build up a strong U.S. billing's base of $170 million. In a roll-reversal it retreated to Britain following the buyout of its U.S. shop by McCann-Erickson, part of the Interpublic Group of Companies.

Annual Review

A mixture of $3.2 million in new business, reduced spending of $1.3 million from existing clients, lost business totaling $1.1 million, and static activity overseas led to a 1.5% growth in billings. Growth of 10.8% is projected for 1988, reflecting a restoration of 1987 budget cuts, full-year returns from new clients, and new business from Accu-Sort and Laventhol & Horwath added in January, 1988. The pr ($1.7 million in 1987) and direct marketing divisions and Lefton Design Studio, established in November, 1987, should stimulate growth. James W. Annual Review

Ending its first full year as a subsidiary of Scali, McCabe, Sloves, the agency managed a moderate $12.3 million growth in billings with $7.3 million of that from new accounts. Major new players with estimated annualized billings were Blue Cross/Blue Shield of Florida ($10.4 million), Standard Register ($3 million), Virginia Division of Tourism ($3.[illegible] million) and Mash's Inc. ($1 million). Growth from existing clients of $6 million included Alcatel ($2 million), Virginia Power ($2 million) and Signet Bank ($2.4 million). Lost business totaled only $1 million. Because of an active plan to acquire new business, the projected billings increase for 1988 is 20%.

Annual Review

This medical agency suffered a 2% decline in billings and was rescued from greater losses by the acquisition of the General Nutrition Corp. account ($1.3 million). The agency lost $300,000 with the departure of the Block Drug account and had declines from existing clients just under $3 million, mainly from Pfizer and Glaxo. Growth for 1988 is dependent on product introductions by clients awaiting FDA approval of new product applications.

Annual Review

Under the Saatchi & Saatchi PLC umbrella, M&M expanded to include Rumrill-Hoyt's New York office ($60 million annualized) and Fairfax Advertising ($40 million)—both S&S units. The agency converted Fairfax to McCaffrey & McCall National Offices, with offices in Atlanta, Indianapolis and Irvine, Calif., and merged Fairfax, New York, into the main M&M office. The R-H linkup also gave M&M a Toronto office to handle Burroughs-Wellcome and Bacardi, two R-H clients. Seven other field offices were founded to service new client, Mercedes-Benz Dealer Program. Including 1986 billings from the merged S&S units in M&M totals, M&M had actual 1987 growth of about 5.1% based on restated 1986 billings of $293 million. Increased spending from existing clients, mainly T. Rowe Price, Chase Manhattan Bank and Hartford Insurance Group, produced the gain. New accounts basically cancelled

Annual Review

The agency returned a 19.8% worldwide increase in billings. Gains from new business and existing clients matched each other. Some $100 million departed in lost business with $20 million of that from U.S. accounts. Acquisitions included offices in Taiwan, Germany, a healthcare agency in New Jersey-Bogart Delafield Ferrier—and Geers Gross Advertising's U.S. business. Domestic growth was fueled by a 17% increase in the New York office, which did not include about $130 million in billings to be gained from the Geers Gross buyout. McCann purchased the U.S. part of Geers Gross at yearend. Projections for the New York office include breaking the $1 billion mark by 1992. Both home and abroad, M-E plans to enter new markets in 1988 through acquisition. McCann also expects healthy growth from new business.

Existing business grew by $11.6 million highlighted by increased spending from Norwegian Caribbean Lines, Piedmont Airlines and Federal National Mortgage. Overall growth of 11.2% was affected by the loss of two accounts resigned late in the year with $6.8 million in annualized billings between them. Charles C. Divestiture of the Chicago office ($12 million in billings) largely contributed to the 10.9% decrease in overall billings. Remaining U.S. clients boosted their budgets 2%. International activity, mainly entailing special projects for Ford Motor Co., remained static. The Southfield, Mich. office was closed and billings were divided between the Cleveland office and the new Holland, Pa., office. Annual Review

Overseas expansion—aided by the establishment of 19 new offices and favorable exchange rates—was the major contribution to worldwide billings growth of 16.1% in 1987 for this largest unit of Ogilvy Group. U.S. billings increased by only 4.8%, despite billings infusion from new clients, Beecham and Ford ($80 million), the latter resulting in the opening of a Detroit office. Major accounts lost were CBS Inc. and Columbia Pictures. The addition of the Chesebrough-Pond's account ($55 million) and Ford significantly helped boost billings internationally. Kenneth Roman moved up to chairman-ceo, Norman Berry, former creative head and president-N.Y., became president-creative and Alexander Brody came over from DYR to become president-international.

INSIST ON CIBACHROME DISPLAY PRINT MATERIALS AND FILMS FOR SHOW-STOPPING EXHIBITS AND RETAIL DISPLAYS.

You're going to stop your customer. Command attention. Create a dynamic selling environment.

Or you won't.

It's really as simple as that… whether you're responsible for a complex trade show exhibit or retail display, a giant mural in an airport or product shots in a fast-food restaurant.

The key to a competitive edge? It's fundamental, yet often overlooked: the image quality and stopping power of your display prints or backlit transparencies.

Is the color rich, vibrant, truly arresting? Is the image clean and sharp? Is there optimum contrast? All the compelling facets and details of the original—are they there?

And, will the image resist fading under strong lighting?

With Cibachrome photographic products, you can answer "yes" to every question, every time. Cibachrome materials are a unique exhibit/display medium. Examine a Cibachrome product side-by-side with any other type of print or transparency, and you'll notice a difference. Often a striking difference.

Leading companies demand Cibachrome products

Successful exhibiting companies share these two things in common: they want maximum stopping and selling power in their displays; and they insist on Cibachrome products.

In large-scale trade shows, superb Cibachrome colors, contrast and sharpness make exhibits stand out in visually cluttered settings. Brilliant Cibachrome prints and display films make all the difference when, as research shows, visitors spend as little time as seven seconds deciding to attend your exhibit—or not.

And within your exhibit, Cibachrome quality helps gain customer interest, extends the visit and focuses attention on your sales message.

In consumer-oriented exhibits, as in a bank or airport, Cibachrome vibrancy captures busy customers who might otherwise pass you by.

In retail applications, you can achieve lovely flesh tones and natural, appealing contrast for glamorous fashion an[illegible]smetic displays. Or you can pr[illegible]ce bold, larger-than-life colors a[illegible] contrast for effective jewelry, food, automotive and appliance displays. All by specifying Cibachrome products from your designer and photo lab.

And Cibachrome clients continue to find new display applications. One major retailer used Cibachrome print materials to display a new tool kit rather than risk pilferage of over 100 small components. Sales were good and theft was eliminated. Many clothing retailers use Cibachrome backlit transparencies instead of mannequins. Their clothing looks more dynamic and their sales areas appear more inviting.

Commercial interior designers, museum directors and gallery exhibitors also rely on Cibachrome products. Our materials retain their brilliance for years longer—even under constant, strong lighting.

The Cibachrome process

Cibachrome quality comes from the unique chemical compatibility of our materials and process. Other types of materials generate dyes with silver dye couplers. In the ILFORD Cibachrome Process P-3, pure and highly stable azo dyes are already present in our unique process; they're then selectively bleached away. The result is a richer, more saturated and more permanent image.

What's more, all Cibachrome products are direct-positive for printing directly from your original transparencies. Because no internegative is ever required, you get far more accurate color rendition and unrivaled, first-generation sharpness.

The Cibachrome selection

You can select from a full range of Cibachrome products to suit your needs precisely.

CIBACHROME II PRINT MATERIAL, DELUXE GLOSSY SURFACE (CPS.1K)—for a brilliant surface, intense color saturation and dramatic contrast. The strong yet flexible polyester base provides durability for portable displays plus easy mounting, grommeting and splicing.

CIBACHROME II PRINT MATERIAL, DELUXE GLOSSY SURFACE (CF.1K)—our newest print material offers all the superb properties of CPS.1K but with a lower contrast range. It produces outstanding prints from high-contrast originals without extensive and costly masking.

CIBACHROME II DISPLAY FILM, TRANSLUCENT BASE (CL.F7)—our backlit display material, with a semi-opaque, translucent base, eliminates the need for built-in diffusors in light boxes and panels, making exhibit/display hardware easier to transport. Same long lasting high quality as our transparent-base film.

CIBACHROME II DISPLAY FILM, TRANSPARENT BASE (CTD.F7)—backlit display material with brilliant color, outstanding sharpness and show-stopping contrast. For light boxes with built-in diffusors.

Make the brilliant choice

Ask yourself this: are your photographic materials merely adequate—or do they give an extra competitive edge to your entire exhibit or display?

If your answer is "merely adequate," you should discover the new dimensions in stopping and selling power that Cibachrome display print materials and films can provide. We can help you do just that.

To contact your ILFORD Cibachrome representative, or a nearby professional Cibachrome color lab with exhibit and display experience, call us at 1-800-631-2522.

And by the way, if you or your company are just beginning in the exhibit/display medium, we'll be happy to work with you from the planning stage through installation.

Annual Review

This direct marketing subsidiary of DDB Needham Worldwide was formed by a merger of Rapp & Collins USA, New York, and Direct Response Group, Dallas-both bought and merged by DDB in 1986. Billings jumped 21.5%, strongly influenced by $16.3 million in increased spending from existing clients. Major contributors were Showtime ($2 million), and Bristol-Myers ($4.7 million). New business generated $8.7 million, much of that from Hyatt Hotels ($5.4 million in annualized billings), although accounts lost took with them $7.4 million. Billings growth for 1988 is estimated at 15%, mostly from anticipated new business and continued growth from the current roster.

Annual Review

The 8.1% jump in billings is credited to the acquisition of new accounts—VHA Hospital, Murata Business Systems, Partners National Healthplan and Hibernia National Bank—which together carried total billings of $8.8 million for the year ($15.5 million annualized). Existing accounts—Motel 6, El Chico, Grandy's and American Catfish Institution accounts—added another $1.3 million. Lost business amounted to $2.4 million. Projections for the agency call for another year of growth at 8%, traced to new business gained in 1987 and continued growth in the level of media placement activity of larger accounts.

Annual Review

Billings in 1987 edged past the agency's 15% projection for last year as existing clients, led by American Honda Motors and New Century/Vista Film Co., boosted billings by $21 million. New clients brought in another $7 million, while lost business totaled $12 million. Growth in 1988 is projected at 10%, mostly from a mixture of increased spending from the current account lineup and new business. The agency, which closed its Sacramento and New York service offices at year-end, traces its lineage to the former Needham Harper/LA office, which its principals purchased in a management buyout in October, 1986.

Annual Review

Growth at Saatchi & Saatchi Advertising Worldwide, its U.S. composition of which is showed in the accompanying office breakouts, was related primarily to the merger of DFS Dorland Worldwide in mid-1987. DFS reported U.S. billings of $901.4 million for 1986, and was merged into the Saatchi & Saatchi New York operation that grew out of Compton Advertising. That operation—in New York now called Saatchi & Saatchi DFS Compton and in its two other locations, Saatchi & Saatchi DFS Torrance (Calif.) and Saatchi & Saatchi DFS San Francisco—had U.S. gross income of $257.8 million on billings of $1.68 billion. The New York office billings total of $1.4 billion ranks Saatchi & Saatchi DFS Compton as the largest shop in that city, ahead of No. 2 Grey Advertising's $1.2 billion. Saatchi & Saatchi DFS is "reasonably optimistic" about 1988, based in part on the new client acquisitions in the seven months since the merger. Tyson Foods added $25 million in annualized billings, Little Caesar Pizza $10 million, Blue Arrow $10-$15 million. An undetermined but large amount will come from Toyota's Lexus account. It lost Cunard Lines, and resigned British Airways, which went to sister agency in the Saatchi & Saatchi PLC network, Backer Spielvogel Bates, and Jeep, which was transferred to another network agency, William Esty Co. Another cause for optimism is increased spending from General Mills ($10 million) and RJR Nabisco.

Annual Review

Void of totals from its subsidiaries, Fallon McElligott and the Martin Agency, Scali U.S. billings total dropped 3.8% and worldwide totals grew by only 9.4%—the difference being a 45% growth in non-U.S. billings from the Scali side. This Ogilvy Group unit closed its Los Angeles office which previously had been merged with LA operations of sister agency, Cole & Weber, and shuttered its Atlanta office, leaving only the New York shop. Major account acquisitions included Shulton ($25 million annualized) and Sea World ($9 million). Big losses were Columbia Pictures ($10 million) and National Dairy Board ($6.5 million), lost only six months after it was added. Overseas billings got a boost through the purchase of Rilova Zamorano & Rodriquez, Madrid, and WestCan in Vancouver, the latter from Cole & Weber. In the U.S., Scali purchased Morton Goldberg Associates, a sales promotion agency. Alan Pesky resigned as vice-chairman, chief operating officer, and became a consultant to the agency.

Annual Review

The 22.6% decline in billings was a direct result of business lost in the Chicago office. Specifically major losses were incurred from United and Levi Strauss. S&A claims to be involved in a major restructuring to revive agency business. The New York office, which operates as Chapman Stone & Adler, reported gains in 1987 as a result of new business from First Brands and added expenditures from New York Telephone and the U.S. Postal Service. Expectations there are for continued growth.

Growth from existing business was strongest with major increases from RJR Nabisco, Procter & Gamble and Continental Baking Co. Annual Review

Overseas increases of 13.6% in billings saved the agency from worldwide losses in 1987. U.S. billings were down 6.4% because of a string of lost accounts suffered from management upheaval and buyout turmoil that rattled the agency all year long. Major account losses from Burger King ($200 million), Discover Card ($42 million), Hyatt Hotels ($16 million), Goodyear ($25 million) and Slice ($30 million) influenced wholesale staff cutbacks especially in New York and Chicago. New business gains were minor in comparison. Growth came from Tenneco Automotive, Fisher-Price, Kellogg, Lever Bros., Miller Brewing and US Sprint, while existing clients, Kraft and S.C. Johnson, lowered their budgets. However, 1988 brings a major new business push for the agency especially in New York and Chicago where executives were placed with marching orders to acquire new business. Management changes swept from the top down. Don Johnston, chairman-CEO of JWT Group, left as the group was dissolved as a holding company resulting from the buyout by WPP Group PLC, London. Burt Manning returned as chairman-CEO of J. Walter Thompson Co., replacing Mr. Johnston, and Steve Bowen became president JWT/USA from executive-VP. The entity, J. Walter Thompson, now includes the offices of the same name, Brouillard Communications and Thompson Recruitment Advertising.

Billings increased by [illegible].4% largely because of a forfeiture of $10 million billings to lost accounts, Charan Industries and Panosh Place. However, a 10% increase is projected for 1988, coming from growth in existing clients and from newcomer, Galoob Toys ($12 million annualized). Additionally, the toy and game industry is expected to rebound from a flat 1987. Annual Review

Nominal losses outweighed by gains of $1.5 million billings in new business and $8.2 million in growth from existing clients produced only 3% growth in overall billings at this Dallas-based agency which is part of Diversified Agency Services (DAS) at Omnicom Group. The Dallas headquarters, accounting for 61% of total volume, actually dropped about 1% in billings, reflecting the poor economy in the state. The promotions and Geographical Marketing Group also showed negative growth. The agency purchased Atlanta-based Cargill Wilson & Acree, also part of DAS Omnicom, picked up CW&A's field office in Birmingham, Ala., and folded in those operations Jan. 1, 1988. A second field office was founded to serve another client in Tulsa.

Annual Review

Two independent agencies, Atlanta-based Tucker Wayne & Co., and Birmingham Ala.-based Luckie & Forney, merged in 1987. The merged units will continue to operate from their base cities. The merger was to make both shops more competitive on a national and regional basis, and although the merger involved similar accounts (Southern Bell in Atlanta, South Central Bell in Birmingham, two large bakeries and three banks), there has been no client fallout. However, there were some staff reductions related to staff duplications and Tucker Wayne's dissolving of its direct marketing business because of a similar operation at L&F.

Strong growth of $12 million from new accounts was diminished by a $4 million decline in ad budgets of existing clients, the loss of Jockey International ($5 million) that went in-house and the resigned Calvin Wine Coolers account. Annual Review

Virtually all the billings increase of $7.4 million at the agency came from new clients, the largest being Guest Quarters Suite Hotels, Wendy's Fast Food Restaurants (new markets) and Nutri-System Weight Loss Centers. Existing clients, especially Tastykake, Mannington Mills and Scott Paper, increased their budgets by $2.4 million in the aggregate more than compensating for the $2 million in lost accounts, much of that from Blue Cross/Blue Shield of Greater Philadelphia. A modest 5% billings growth is forecast for 1988 because of continued economic uncertainty in the advertising business. Employment at the group dropped 8.6% in 1987.

Annual Review

WRG recorded a 15% growth in billings in 1987, largely the result of strong new client gains: Polo/Ralph Lauren ($10 million), ITT ($11-12 million), Cosmair ($10 million) and MCI ($40 million). Because much of the new business was acquired late in the year, full-year returns in 1988 will have a significant impact on billings growth. Dick Macedo became president of WRG/West from Chiat/Day and is expected to help boost billings for this shop which recorded only 4% growth in 1987. The agency also formed a direct marketing unit.

Annual Review

Changing its name from Wunderman Ricotta & Kline, this direct marketing subsidiary of Young & Rubicam reported billings growth of 15.8% domestically. Pivotal to this growth was an assignment from the U.S. Army. Other highlights included the launch of the American Express Optima Card and new assignments from AT&T, Clorox and American Express. A 26.7% worldwide billings increase included sizable volume from the introduction of a mail-order catalog for client J.P. Carroll & Co. Ltd., based in Ireland. Manufacturers Hanover Trust, the only account lost, was resigned. A joint venture was formed with CCX Network Inc. to provide clients and other companies with a marketing database called Infobase Services.

Annual Review

Billings growth of $5.7 million, up 6.5%, was strongly influenced by new clients, Sealy and Clairol. The Cleveland office grew by 7.8% while New York slipped 0.5% in billings. Growth from existing business totaling $3.6 million resulted from such clients as Stouffer Hotels and Restaurants, General Dynamics and BP America, which more than compensated for minor decreases clients. The departure of client National City Bank of Cleveland and several project-oriented clients accounted for the $3.3 million in losses, although the loss of Blue Cross/Blue Shield will not be felt until 1988. Yellow Pages directory advertising billings additionally decreased because of corporate mergers on the client side. Income levels remained static because fee business was transferred to actual media purchases and commissions were lower for media buys handled by a client's agency of record. A 10% increase in billings is projected for 1988, partly the result of a full year of billings from new clients, Genie Home Products and Pennbancorp & Gallatin.

Manning: Return of the native

"The long way around is the shortest way home" proved true for Burt Manning. Passed over as successor to about-to-retire Don Johnston, chairman-ceo of JWT, in early 1986, Mr. Manning departed to become a principal and chairman of the executive committee at Jordan, Case, Taylor & McGrath, which quickly inserted his name between Jordan and Case. Meanwhile JWT was bought out by WPP, and in July 1987, Mr. Manning was asked to run JWT as chairman-ceo.

Introducing the Cycle Sat

You know that sinking feeling – when your boss or a client calls and barks his complaints about lost spots, damaged spots, poorly dubbed spots or spots with missing traffic instructions. It can ruin your day.

Now, instead of delivering your spot TV commercials to television stations by conventional ground courier and hoping for the best, there's a better way: The Cycle Sat Satellite Courier System.

Avoid dub flubs.

The Cycle Sat Satellite Courier System delivers network quality spots and traffic instructions simultaneously by satellite – just like the networks. Turnaround time for duplication is totally eliminated because the spot is fed directly to the engineer at the receiving TV station. So you get the quality of first-generation spots while you avoid the possibility of lost or damaged tapes.

Stop doggin' dubs.

Keeping track of your dubs can be a real pain. Not to mention all the time you waste every week doggin' dubs, explaining lost or poor quality tapes to your client and arranging make-goods.

Cycle Sat can save you crucial time because there's no waiting for dubs. And for each spot transmission, the station also receives an accurate instruction letter. All this makes you — and your spots — look very good, indeed.

To learn more about how Cycle Sat can help you see your spots run on time, call 1-800-622-1865 today.

Is There Any Hope for Advertising?
Howard Luck Gossage

"Must reading for everyone who earns his living in advertising." — David Ogilvy. Gossage dazzled the advertising world in the 1960s and 1970s with an irrepressible wit and an irreverent attitude. Among his notable campaigns were those for Irish whiskey and Eagle Shirtmakers. This book is a collection of his speeches and articles. Ed. Kim Rotzoll, Jarlath Graham, and Barrows Mussey. Illus. 240 pp. $19.95.

Now, while everyone else is sending mail that looks mass-produced, you can send mass-produced mail that looks personal, gets opened ... and gets read.

Introducing Opti-Scan: A breakthrough production technology that lets you personalize multiple direct mail package elements and insert them into a conventional closed-face personalized outer envelope.

It gives you the look and feel of an individually typewritten letter.

Compare Opti-Scan to any other personalized direct mail production technology. You'll find none better. That's because Opti-Scan uses advanced imaging technology to personalize multiple package elements, and then goes one step beyond what any other system can offer: It uses state-of-the-art lasers to optically read and match your personalized mailing components and insert them into a conventional closed-face personalized outer envelope. The result is a direct mail package that looks and feels as though it has been typed by your secretary.

It lets you meet your volume requirements—from as little as 10,000 to over 1,000,000 pieces per day.

Throw away the limitations of the past. Opti-Scan means you'll no longer have to settle for either a lower-quality product or a smaller-quantity mailing. That's because Opti-Scan provides you with the best of both worlds: the absolute highest quality, at production volumes that can meet virtually every direct marketer's needs.

It's fast and it's accurate.

As a matter of fact, Opti-Scan is up to 10 times faster than any other technology in its category. It personalizes, matches, and inserts your package elements at a rate no one ever thought possible. And the advanced optical reader utilized by Opti-Scan is far more accurate than the hand-match and semi-automated matching technologies previously available.

It's the single most affordable way to personalize multiple direct mail package components and insert them into a conventional closed-face outer envelope.

Here at last is an affordable way to create truly personal-looking direct mail that can break through today's mailbox clutter. Opti-Scan's advanced computer technology makes it efficient to use no matter how small or large your mailing may be. And that means you finally have the flexibility to creatively do what you need to do to get your mailings opened and read in today's fiercely competitive direct mail environment.

It's available only from LaSalle.

Only LaSalle can offer you the revolutionary Opti-Scan technology. LaSalle has been serving the production and lettershop needs of the country's leading direct marketers for more than 40 years. Our representatives are ready to provide you with responsive, personal service at an affordable price.

new world headquarters of the Rite Aid Corp

Metro Harrisburg's downtown is taking on a new look!

Metro Harrisburg—the dynamic hub of the Keystone state—has long been one of the Northeast's best markets.

Exciting news about plans for the revitalization of the downtown area—the world headquarters of the Rite Aid drug chain and a new, sprawling Hilton Hotel and convention complex will be built in the heart of downtown Harrisburg in 1988. The $75 million dollar projects will bring nearly 2,000 full-time jobs to the city and help to provide Harrisburg with a face-lift to begin the final decade of this century.

The best advertisers don't believe in fairy tales...

With today's staff cutbacks, lower budgets, and wicked competition, who can wait to be kissed by Inspiration to live profitably ever after?

Advertisers need real ideas, strategies, results—now. So where do some of the best—both newcomers and the more experienced—go for down-to-earth help? Where thousands of sales and marketing executives have gone since 1924. To the American Management Association.

AMA advertising courses answer career needs. They're not just work-related. They're work specific. The list is long, too, to satisfy a wide range of requirements...but the courses are all short and up to date.

AMA course leaders come from the field. They loosen their ties (or don't even wear them) and speak your language. In a matter of days, they provide you with new, proven ways to better direct your resources. They explain how to build more business with creative use of marketing communication tools. Like trade shows... co-op advertising...public relations.

AMA quality is guaranteed 100%. And that's no fairy tale. If you have paid your fee in advance and are not satisfied with the course, you can ask for--and get—credit toward another course of comparable length. Or a FULL REFUND. 97% of attendees rate courses "good" or "excellent."

Make the move that can make you worth more to your company. Send for your free AMA catalog now. Or inquire about individual courses with this coupon or call (518) 891-0065.

We impressed Rand McNally who named the Research Triangle cities the third most liveable place in the country.

We continue to impress the highest number of Ph. D.'s per capita of any place in the nation, enough to make them want to live here.

We impressed the U.S. Census Bureau as one of the fastest growing areas in the U.S. with one of the lowest unemployment rates anywhere.

We've also impressed a lot of local, regional and national advertisers with great circulation and a lower CPM than broadcast media in North Carolina's Triangle.

AND SOME PEOPLE STILL THINK WE'RE WHERE BARNEY AND GOMER COME FOR EXCITEMENT.

Leading agencies in top 50 markets

Advertisers in 1987 showed a continuing interest in the power of regional agencies to reach national audiences.

These agencies—representing all but the top 25 agencies in the AD AGE 500—accounted for 45.2 percent of the group's total U.S. billings.

Their power is demonstrated by their growth in spot television spending. These agencies increased their expenditures on spot tv by 7.5 percent over 1986. This compares with a 6.5 percent growth for the top 25.

Most significantly, while network television billings among the top 25 agencies fell 1.4 percent, network billings among the remaining agencies grew 1.7 percent.

To identify these agencies, AD AGE lists them in ranked order in the top 50 markets below. Billings totals are only for local shops in the respective market. For example, Evans Communications is ranked No. 1 in Salt Lake City on the basis of its billings in that city only. Its Seattle shop ranks No. 2 in that city.

Most of the agencies listed by market reported billings information via questionnaires verified by outside accountants. However, those with asterisks (*) did not report in this issue and required phone calls. Local business journals and advertising associations were consulted at times to arrive at an accurate market list when agencies did not cooperate.

The chart covers the top 50 markets, but only 47 are listed because of the merging of adjacent, inter-dependent markets (e.g. Oakland and San Francisco) or the lack of at least four agency reports from a market (e.g. Anaheim). Only the top 50 are considered because few agencies of size are found in leading markets beyond that point.

Market rankings are based on 1986 U.S. Census data.

'Brands' explained

Saatchi & Saatchi Advertising broke the tape just ahead of Leo Burnett Co. and J. Walter Thompson Co. in the race to the top of the 1987 "brand" chart

Burnett's finish gave the agency its third silver medal in the "brand" competition while a poor year for JWT put an end to its two-year reign as "brand" champ.

Saatchi's jump from 14th to 1st in the "brand" list came from the merging of DFS Dorland Worldwide with Saatchi & Saatchi Compton. With the merger, core billings for Saatchi were up almost 14%. Burnett's finish resulted from sheer growth in U.S. billings, up 12%. Burnett edged out JWT by $6 million in core agency billings.

The ADVERTISING AGE "brand" chart was created three years ago to rank agencies by pure advertising billings. As listed, these agencies are stripped of subsidiaries that have their own identity and/or deal in specialties such as PR, direct response, Yellow Pages, medical or sales promotion.

In this era of mergers, such simplification helps advertisers examine the octopus-like agencies whose arms continue to grab at new shops and subsidiaries.

The Saatchi merger was not the only consolidation that had an effect on the 1987 "brand" listing. In all, nine agencies were added to this year's list that had previously fallen short of the billings threshold. These additions came as a result of newly bolstered billings figures for merged agencies and elimination of agencies that were swallowed by bigger shops.

In compiling the agency core list, all subsidiaries of a "brand" name agency were excluded from "brand" totals, but branch offices, most of which bear the name of "brand" parent, were included. This can be controversial, because a number of the larger shops, particularly BBDO Worldwide, DDB Needham, Foote, Cone & Belding and Young & Rubicam, are now seeking to become "seamless," though in the case of some subsidiaries, they maintain separate identities.

AD AGE editors pared the shops based on their reporting of figures for subsidiaries. Where such information was not provided or incomplete, agencies were asked to provide the information. When estimates could not be obtained from the shops, they were assigned to the various components by AA editors.

In streamlining agencies by breaking down the consolidated, a number of "seamless" agencies emerged. The unbundling of Saatchi & Saatchi's components that gave it an overall ranking of No. 2 in this issue, included billings for Cochrane Chase, Klemtner, McCaffrey & McCall, Rumrill-Hoyt, leaving Saatchi & Saaatchi DFS units as the core.

Burnett, No. 10 among consolidated agencies, was free of subsidiary contributions. Burnett is the largest U.S. agency in billings under a single roof.

JWT fell from No. 1 to No. 3 in the brand list and from No. 4 to No. 7 in consolidated rankings. Management upheaval plagued JWT all year as lost accounts dropped U.S. billings 6.4%.

Much of the movement among this year's brands occurred at the bottom third of the chart. Newcomers Earle Palmer Brown Cos., Hal Riney & Partners, HDM, Levine, Huntley, Schmidt & Beaver, Doremus & Co., Nationwide Advertising Service and Direct Marketing Group were scattered at the back of the pack.

Two other first-timers made even stronger showings. Backer Spielvogel Bates, a marriage of Backer & Spielvogel and Ted Bates Advertising, finished No. 14 in the brand chart and No. 3 among consolidated agencies. Last year, Backer & Spielvogel and Ted Bates Advertising finished No. 19 and No. 15, respectively. Newly formed AC&R/DHB&Bess came in at No. 23, while among consolidated agencies it ranked No. 35.

Such a listing of core shops has the most impact on subsidiary-packed agencies like Young & Rubicam. The No. 1 U.S. agency on a consolidated basis, drops to No. 6 among "brand" agencies.

The mega agency leaders in 1987 had a decidedly British flavor as acquisitions elevated WPP Group PLC and WCRS/Belier, both London-based, to the select group that once again was paced by Saatchi & Saatchi PLC in worldwide gross income.

The order of finish was virtually a re-run from 1986 but within the groups themselves hardly one exited 1987 with the organizational structure that it began the year with.

Acquisitions were major forces behind restructuring. They opened the door for this year's two new British entities. WPP bought last year's No. 4, JWT Group, and WCRS acquired Ball Partnership and 49% of Groupe Belier.

Saatchi & Saatchi cooled its acquisition heels on the agency side of its business but reshaped itself from top to bottom as it folded U.S. acquisitions made in 1986 into its organization. It merged Ted Bates Worldwide into Backer & Spielvogel to form Backer Spielvogel Bates. DFS Dorland Worldwide was merged into Saatchi & Saatchi Compton Inc. to form Saatchi & Saatchi Advertising Worldwide.

The only Saatchi agencies outside either of these two monoliths are William Esty Co. and Conill Advertising, both New York based. Esty, in particular, was kept out so Saatchi could retain two car accounts—Jeep/Eagle with Esty and Toyota at Saatchi & Saatchi Advertising Worldwide.

Interpublic, No. 2, formed Lintas:Worldwide, which now includes once independent Campbell-Ewald Worldwide. In 1986 it broke up the Marschalk Campbell-Ewald Worldwide network and in 1987 merged Campbell-Ewald's remaining U.S. shops with SSC&B:Lintas. In the new order, the SSC&B moniker has been laid to rest.

NOTE: Dollars in millions

The tightest race was for No. 3 in worldwide gross income with Omnicom Group beating out WPP. Ogilvy Group, No. 5, grew the fastest—31.9% in worldwide gross income—but had too far to come to replace any of the top four mega groups.

Saatchi & Saatchi proved not only to be the biggest, but its return on revenue the best. Its 6.1% return outpaced No. 2 Interpublic with 5.1% and No. 3 Omnicom Group, 4.3%. (See accompanying chart.)

The Mickelberry Corp. mega group continued to break apart. The New York-based public holding company that began as a marketer of specialty meat products started collecting advertising agencies in early 1980s. And in the past year, it has systematically divested itself of all but BBDM, Chicago, and Calvillo, Shevack & Partners.

First to go in January, 1987, was its biggest unit, C&W Group, (formerly Cunningham & Walsh), sold to N W Ayer. In September, Laurence, Charles, Free & Lawson went to Lowe Howard-Spink & Bell PLC, London. Within LHS&B, LCF&L will network with Allen Brady & Marsh, London.

Mickelberry had trouble building its agency base. From 1982 when Mickelberry acquired Cunningham & Walsh, to the time of the sale of C&W, Mickelberry had not reported a gain in annual net income.

For the rankings of mega groups, Ad Age permitted mega groups to report fee income from non-media units in worldwide gross income. That figure is then capitalized to arrive at a billings equivalent (See Page 4 for definition of capitalized billings.) This is the same manner in which individual agencies treat their non-media units.

Saatchi & Saatchi is the only group to report pure "media advertising" figures, as it calls them. Media in Saatchi parlance does not include such disciplines as sales promotion, direct mail, consulting, design, market research. These non-media units balloon Saatchi's worldwide gross income to $1.68 billion on capitalized billings of $11.4 billion —figures picked up in the "Top six" chart for comparative purposes.

If non-media businesses were not included in the chart, only WPP would fall in the rankings—from No. 4 to No. 5, replaced by Ogilvy Group—based on WPP's drop in worldwide gross income to about $520 million from $892.5 million. Ogilvy's gross income would drop, too, but only to about $673 million from $723.9 million.

WCRS, however, counters Saatchi's methods indicating that the so-called, non-media advertising units are all part of a one-stop-shopping concept WCRS and many other mega groups are seeking to achieve. Since these units are integral to the rest of the business at a mega agency group, including media, they should be included in income.

Saatchi & Saatchi PLC

Saatchi & Saatchi PLC, London, had worldwide gross income of $1.3 billion on billings of $9 billion in 1987 for media-advertising operations, compared with estimated gross income of $1.2 billion on billings of $8.4 billion in 1986.

Non-U.S. returns contributed all the year-to-year growth. Non-U.S. gross income was $704.6 million, up 26.3% from an estimated $558 million in 1986, and non-U.S. billings of $4.7 billion, were up 26.6% from an estimated $3.7 billion in 1986. U.S. contributions included $630 million in gross income, down 5.3% from an estimated $665.2 million, and $4.3 billion in billings, down 6.8% from an estimated $4.7 billion.

Prior-year estimates by Ad Age are based on the sum of returns in 1986 of the current components in the Saatchi network. Saatchi, unlike other groups, does not include non-media income in its totals.

Saatchi & Saatchi contains two big worldwide networks:

- Saatchi & Saatchi Advertising Worldwide.
- Backer Spielvogel Bates Worldwide.

Not part of either of the two agency networks are independent U.S. agencies, William Esty Co. and Conill Advertising.

The London-based group divides its organization into Saatchi & Saatchi Communications (all the advertising agencies) and Saatchi & Saatchi Consulting, the latter of which includes Yankelovich Clancy & Shulman in the U.S.

S&S went through extensive reorganization in 1987. Following the purchase in late 1986 of Ted Bates Worldwide and Backer & Spielvogel, S&S merged the two agencies into Backer Spielvogel Bates. Most former Bates subsidiaries were retained under the Backer Spielvogel Bates umbrella.

Names of core agencies in the U.S. were switched to Backer Spielvogel Bates, while the vast Bates international network fell under the Ted Bates International logo. This March, the big Dorland U.K. agency ($331.2 million in billings) was merged into the BSB office to form BSB/Dorland.

Dorland was the Saatchi & Saatchi arm is 1986 that bought Dancer Fitzgerald Sample to create DFS Dorland. In 1987, the DFS portion was then merged with Saatchi & Saatchi Compton Worldwide to form Saatchi & Saatchi Advertising Worldwide.

This new unit in the U.S. includes the old Compton Advertising's New York operation and DFS Dorland's three offices in Torrance and San Francisco, Calif., and New York. The international group of Saatchi & Saatchi Compton Worldwide—consisting of the former Compton international network and Saatchi & Saatchi network—remained essentially intact.

William Esty Co. gained a Detroit office when it got Saatchi & Saatchi Compton Worldwide's Jeep/Eagle account—funneled to the agency when S&S Compton merged with DFS Dorland. The merged unit was then able to retain the Toyota account brought into the merger by DFS Dorland.

In another office shift in the U.S., Rumrill-Hoyt's New York office was merged with McCaffrey & McCall, as was the entire Saatchi agency, Fairfax Advertising.

During the year, Campbell-Ewald became part of Lintas:Worldwide, a new mega agency in Interpublic. In the U.S., the Lintas shops, formerly called SSC&B:Lintas, were changed to Lintas:Campbell-Ewald, except in New York where the agency became just Lintas:New York.

Interpublic had begun reshaping the group formerly called Marschalk/Campbell-Ewald in 1986 when it divided the network into Campbell-Ewald and Lowe Marschalk, the Lowe in the title coming from Lowe Howard-Spink & Bell PLC, a London-based agency holding company that purchased 30% of the agency.

McCann-Erickson continued to acquire agencies. It bought Bogart Delafield Ferrier, a medical agency in New Jersey, and at yearend reached agreement to purchase the U.S. arm of Geers Gross Advertising. In January, 1988, it announced plans to buy Phillips-Ramsey, the largest agency in San Diego. McCann also made a number of foreign agency acquisitions.

WCRS/Belier Group

Two years ago owners of U.K. agency, Wight Collins Rutherford Scott (now WCRS Mathews Marcantonio), saw their future as big player in the agency business providing one-stop shopping, and to do this, the agency needed to be both multi-disciplined and multinational. That meant expansion.

That decision has led to its latest metamorphosis: WCRS/Belier Group, London, which in 1987 had worldwide gross income of $230.2 million on billings of $1.6 billion, compared with estimated gross income of $184 million on billings of an estimated $1.3 billion in 1986. Figures are historic for a like comparison between the two years. WCRS is not listed in the tabular return-on-revenue chart because it has undergone meteoric growth since its last fiscal reporting period, April 1987.

The big growth for WCRS came in September, 1987, when it acquired 49% of Paris-based Groupe Belier from its owner Eurocom. Belier gave WCRS a Continental base. Earlier in the year, WCRS gained a Pacific presence through the acquisition of Ball Partnership from Ogilvy Group. On a constant basis, these non-U.S. acquisitions helped pushed non-U.S. income up from $23.7 million in 1986 to $137.3 million in 1987.

WCRS expanded into the U.S. mostly in 1986. Its U.S. properties include:

- Della Femina Travisano & Partners.
- HBM/Creamer.
- Creamer Dickson Basford, pr.

NOTES: Employees per $1 million in billings is computed by dividing total U.S. employees by U.S. billings in millions of dollars. A negative percent change in employees per $1 million in billings—in parentheses—indicates an improvement in productivity from 1986 to 1987.

Footnotes to tables

if the parent were allowed to fold in billings of its subsidiaries.

For example, in the chart headlined, "Top 10 U.S. agencies in farm publication billings," on Page 78, Creswell, Munsell, Fultz & Zirbel is ranked No. 2. If its billings were not subtracted from those of Y&R, both would appear on the chart and hence be double-dipped.

This policy does present problems. Some subsidiaries report media billings to their parent company differently than they are reported to AA. Sometimes direct response billings are reported to the parent company as capitalized fees and to AA as media billed, or vice versa. Newspaper and magazine categories often contain some or all of farm, business and medical publication billings in either parent or subsidiary.

Also, spot, network and cable TV billings are sometimes combined.

In all cases, subsidiaries are given the full benefit of media billings reported. The listing by media billings in Section II is all undouble-dipped.

Although this process is not undertaken to penalize parent companies, parent media billings must reflect the aggregate of all media billed by subsidiaries. As such, parent companies bear the full responsibility of subsidiary reporting. Parent companies which include the billings of subsidiaries are expected to reflect subsidiary totals within the parent's composite media totals.

Retrospective figures

The "Five-year gross income and billings review" and the "AA 500 Index" contain totals from 1983 to present, for the top 25, top 100 and top 500.

In both charts, all figures are constant, meaning all figures are for the year in which they were reported. The AA 500 for 1987 is not the same group of agencies as the AA 500 for 1986.

In all other cases in this issue, previous years' totals are historical unless otherwise noted. This is done for comparison purposes for individual agencies. Where agencies have been acquired within the last year, 1986 totals represent the parent agency's historical figures as if it owned the agency during the entire previous year.

AA reference to the top 25 agencies refers to those ranked by gross income in Section I, on Page 6, beginning with Young & Rubicam and ending with Chiat/Day. However, totals representing the top 25, top 100 and top 500 are all undouble-dipped. All subsidiaries have been subtracted.

This allows AA to maintain a constant top 25 agencies without double-dipping No. 20 Ogilvy & Mather Direct Response with parent, No. 5 Ogilvy & Mather Worldwide, for example.

Philip Morris force behind new council

By STEVEN W. COLFORD

The spark behind the controversy over two similar industry "councils" set up to fight ad taxes and other issues is tobacco giant Philip Morris Cos.

Phil Smith, chairman-ceo of General Foods Corp., last week said his company's parent "took the initiative" in organizing a new Leadership Council on Advertising Issues, so far made up of GF, Mars Inc., Ogilvy Group, Procter & Gamble Co. and Time Inc.

The ad hoc group is being formed despite the startup of a similiar organization, the Council for Commercial Freedom, an advisory panel to the three advertising associations announced last week.

> "I don't feel there is a need for two organizations working to the same purpose. . . . The existing structures . . . are doing the job."
> —AAF Chairman James Blocki

The purpose of both groups is to fight government infringement on advertiser rights (AA, March 28).

PM took action because of the threat of higher tobacco taxes in lieu of the advertising tax that Florida unsuccessfully tried to implement last year.

Although it has yet to meet, the Leadership Council has been under consideration at least since mid-1987. That's about the same time the associations began hammering out plans for their Council for Commercial Freedom.

Already industry association leaders and their board members are questioning the need for two groups with similar goals, and leave no question as to which they'd like to see continue.

Diamandis seeks investors

Recent industry rumors had speculated that DCI was for sale. The company was created last year in a $650 million management-led buyout of CBS Magazines. 'Conspiracy'

Sorrell claims breakaway is a plot to force LGFE sale

By JON LAFAYETTE and GARY LEVIN

NEW YORK—In a surprising courtroom tactic, WPP Group may try to prove that the walkout of six key Lord, Geller, Federico, Einstein executives was designed to force WPP to sell the agency at a devalued price.

WPP may claim that a circle of conspiracy had been formed by former LGFE Chairman-CEO Richard Lord, his associates and Young & Rubicam, and that Dean Witter Reynolds may be a part of it.

Under this scenario, Dean Witter, both LGFE's client and a contact of Mr. Lord in the breakaway, would try to arrange a purchase of the agency after the executive departure.

WPP Chief Executive Martin Sorrell refused to say whether he had been contacted about a possible sale of LGFE since the walkout on March 18, but he restated his position that the agency is not for sale. Prior to the breakaway,

P&G's new Folgers roasts GF

By JUDANN DAGNOLI and LAURIE FREEMAN

Procter & Gamble Co. is going national with its low-cost challenge to coffee market leader General Foods Corp., beginning in the leader's own backyard.

Sales materials being distributed in the New York metropolitan area on the new "fast-roast" Folgers call it P&G's "first major initiative to achieve share gains" in the stronghold market of GF's Maxwell House brand.

P&G's goal: to "be the No. 1-selling ground coffee brand in metro New York at the start of 1990."

Industry executives call the move a gamble. By replacing regular Folgers with the lower-price version, P&G will either force the $4.8 billion industry to follow suit or be left holding the bag, sources say.

The fast-roast Folgers, essentially a condensation of 16 ounces of coffee into a 13-ounce package, is made by roasting coffee beans "faster and hotter" so they "puff more," a P&G spokeswoman said.

As a result, the company uses fewer green beans and can reduce the list price of the new Folgers.

The launch begins on the East Coast the week of April 11, with shipments to the rest of the U.S. starting about two weeks later.

The product earlier was launched on the West Coast (AA, March 7).

> P&G apparently will support the new Folgers with regional marketing plans, varying in different parts of the country.

The ball is now in the court of GF, which will have to respond quickly—either by converting to or discrediting the product—or risk losing out to Folgers.

Sources close to GF say the company is concerned about P&G's strategy and may try to rally the industry against P&G's low-price move, which executives believe might reduce the "quality" image of major brands.

GF refused comment about its plans.

P&G apparently will support the new Folgers with regional marketing plans, varying in different parts of the country.

In the New York area, for example, P&G sales materials say plans include special events, co-op sampling programs with retailers, regionally targeted media and switchover to the new Folgers in advertising.

Sales materials also promise regional promotions, including New York-area tie-ins with Kraft's Lender's bagels, Fugazy Travel, Marriott Hotels, Thomas' English muffins, Canandaigua Wine Co.'s Manischewitz and P&G's own Duncan Hines products, according to the materials.

Folgers' new 20¢-per-can price reduction will give P&G a strong base in low-price coffee in a market where prices are again spiraling upward at retail. It's a particular advantage against GF, which has lost share and is boosting its retail coffee prices.

GF won't state how much share it has lost. But according to P&G sales materials, GF's national share of the regular coffee market stands at 34.6% of the market in cases, down from 35.9% a year ago. The materials also indicate P&G is closing in

Saturn voyage threatens Riney at Austin Rover

By RAYMOND SERAFIN

Austin Rover Cars of North America, feeling betrayed by Hal Riney & Partners' pursuit of the $80 million-plus Saturn business without its knowledge, may fire Riney from its $20 million account.

"To put it mildly, I am surprised and disappointed that we didn't know sooner," said Raymond Ketchledge, president of Austin Rover, U.S. marketer of the British-built Sterling luxury sedan.

Riney won that business just last May.

"We're assessing what's best for Sterling and its dealers. I don't feel we have to do anything in the next 48 hours, but we do want to get this whole issue behind us," Mr. Ketchledge said in an April 1 interview.

Mr. Ketchledge, in an interview with ADVERTISING AGE about a week earlier, dismissed rumors of Riney's pursuit of the Saturn account. He praised the agency's work on Sterling. And he said he'd been led to believe by Riney officials that they wouldn't go after a large automotive account because that would change the independent nature of the agency by making it overly dependent on a single account.

Mr. Ketchledge said that even if Austin Rover let Riney handle a second automotive account, he doubted General Motors Corp., Saturn's parent, would bend its longstanding policy prohibiting its agencies from working for another auto marketer.

"Even if we're not in direct conflict now, what would happen if we bring in another, smaller car?" Mr. Ketchledge asked.

He added that a number of qualified agencies expressed interest in the account when it was up for review last year.

"I'm confident we can get a good agency in 90 days," he said. Before Riney, the account was handled by Beber Silverstein & Partners, Miami.

Riney President Jim Travis broke the news to Austin Rover Chairman Norman Braman March 29. That was a day after Saturn reduced its

ABC pulls guarantee for kids' TV audience

By VERNE GAY

NEW YORK—ABC-TV last week said it won't give guarantees on commercial time bought on its Saturday morning schedule, which will radically affect how children's TV—and possibly other dayparts—will be purchased.

ABC's decision against providing "make-goods" to advertisers could be dramatic. Networks traditionally agree to make good, or reimburse advertisers, when the actual audience delivered falls short of the networks' guarantees. Already, one major buyer of time on children's shows—Saatchi & Saatchi DFS Compton—said it won't buy time on ABC's schedule.

The confusion over children's TV isn't the only event that threatens to disrupt upfront buying. This week and next, advertisers will begin to pick up options on their third-quarter network inventory, which will be an indication of the 1988-89 prime-time and daytime upfront market's strength or weakness.

In addition, the actors' strike promises to disrupt this summer's buying market.

But ABC's decision will have the most immediate impact because the children's marketplace is expected to start within two weeks.

The Big 3 networks—especially CBS—have sent signals that they wish to drop guarantees in other dayparts. If ABC succeeds in doing that with children's TV, other dayparts on other networks could follow.

The last time a major network—CBS—decided not to guarantee demographics was in 1982 and the consequences were disastrous: Many advertisers refused to place

AIDS spots to test TV policies

Is it OK to say 'condom'?

By JANET MEYERS

The Big 3 TV networks' ad-clearance policies will be put to the test this month by the federal government and other AIDS information groups, whose new public service campaigns will specifically recommend using condoms.

The word "condom" has been a red flag to the networks. But the government's AIDS campaign, which had steered clear of controversy, is entering a second, more explicit phase with public service announcements scheduled for distribution this month.

The spots will target women at risk for contracting AIDS and describe condoms as one of the best ways to avoid the disease.

The American Foundation for AIDS Research, a fund-raising group whose spokeswoman is Elizabeth Taylor, also plans a public service campaign this spring focusing on condoms. The Advertising Council handles, with creative by Scali, McCabe, Sloves, New York.

Recently, representatives from AmFAR, the Centers for Disease Control, the Red Cross, the Surgeon General's office and other groups met to discuss how to persuade the networks to ease their standards.

The CDC campaign's first phase, which broke last October, generally steered clear of mentioning condoms (AA, Sept. 28). Only one of the more than 20 AIDS spots mentioned the word, and only NBC put the message on the air. CBS rejected the spot, while ABC accepted but hasn't aired it.

The total campaign got more than $6 million in free network time through January.

"It's not the word 'condom' that gives us the problem," said George Dessart, CBS/-Broadcast Group VP-program practices. CBS turned down the spot because it advocated contraceptive use, he said.

Some CBS affiliates say commercials and PSAs for condoms wouldn't be accepted in their communities, Mr. Dessart said.

NBC aired the condom spot three or four times without any viewer complaints, said Dom Giofre, manager of corporate information at the network.

ABC will air PSAs that mention condoms in "an informative sense," said David Horowitz, manager of public relations. ABC last year aired an AmFAR spot that featured a replay of Surgeon General C. Everett Koop's congressional testimony advocating the use of condoms. But the network prefers to confine the discussion of condoms to programming, Mr. Horowitz said.

The CDC believes it must use a more targeted approach for the second part of the government's campaign, said Steve Rabin, senior VP for Ogilvy & Mather, Washington, which handles the effort.

In researching how to educate women whose sexual partners may be drug users or bisexuals, O&M discovered "condoms will have to be part of the strategy," he said.#

Do Not Sign Interim Agreements During the SAG/AFTRA Strike.

Since the beginning of the SAG/AFTRA strike against the advertising industry on March 21, 1988, the talent unions have been peddling a so-called "interim agreement" which they are asking advertisers, agencies and production houses to sign.

The A.N.A./A.A.A.A. Joint Policy Committee on Talent Union Relations strongly advises that no one sign an interim agreement.

Here's why:

- The terms of the interim agreement contain provisions proposed by the unions and rejected by the industry in the negotiations. These include a brand new residual scheme for commercials used on cable systems based on cumulative numbers of subscribers to the systems, retention of the cost-of-living allowance clause that the industry had proposed be deleted and which the unions had tentatively agreed to delete, and costly provisions on stunt performers and precision drivers.
- Producers who sign interim agreements will be bound by the unfavorable conditions of those agreements for the entire three-year period of the contract for commercials produced while the interim agreements are in effect.
- By signing interim agreements, producers would be breaking ranks with the industry negotiating team—the Joint Policy Committee—and would accede to the union's "divide and conquer" strategy.
- By signing interim agreements, producers would signal to the unions that they don't care what is in the final contract negotiated between the Joint Policy Committee and the talent unions—a bad signal for this and future negotiations.
- By signing interim agreements, producers would give broad employment and financial support to union members who are on strike against this industry.
- Producers do not need interim agreements to produce commercials. The industry is today producing and will, for the duration of the strike, continue to produce commercials with whatever talent is willing to work.

Do Not Sign SAG/AFTRA Interim Agreements.

Ross Roy buys shop in Canada

By PATRICIA STRNAD

Ross Roy Group this week will announce its acquisition of the Nathan Fraser Agency, Toronto, which has billings of at least $15 million.

The acquisition will raise Ross Roy's Canadian billings by 37.5% to about $55 million, putting it among Canada's top 20 agencies.

G. Fortinberry

Ross Roy Chairman-CEO Glen Fortinberry said late last year that his agency was negotiating to buy agencies in Toronto and the U.S. (AA, Dec. 21). The U.S. agency apparently is Group 243, Ann Arbor, Mich., which holds Domino's Pizza's $50 million-plus national account (see story, Page 22).

Bloomfield Hills-based Ross Roy is expected to merge Nathan Fraser with Ross Roy Advertising, Toronto, one of its two Canadian affiliates. The other affiliate is Commercial Associates/Ross Roy, Windsor, Ontario.

Nathan Fraser's Robert Monk, chairman-executive creative director, and Richard Brightling, president, are likely to keep those titles at the merged agency, sources said.

Dennis Ricketts, senior VP at Ross Roy Advertising, also is expected to play a major role and will spend more time servicing K mart Canada.

Nathan Fraser recently won Continental Airlines' Canadian account from Scali, McCabe, Sloves, Toronto, and has picked up several other accounts that will be disclosed soon, a source said.#

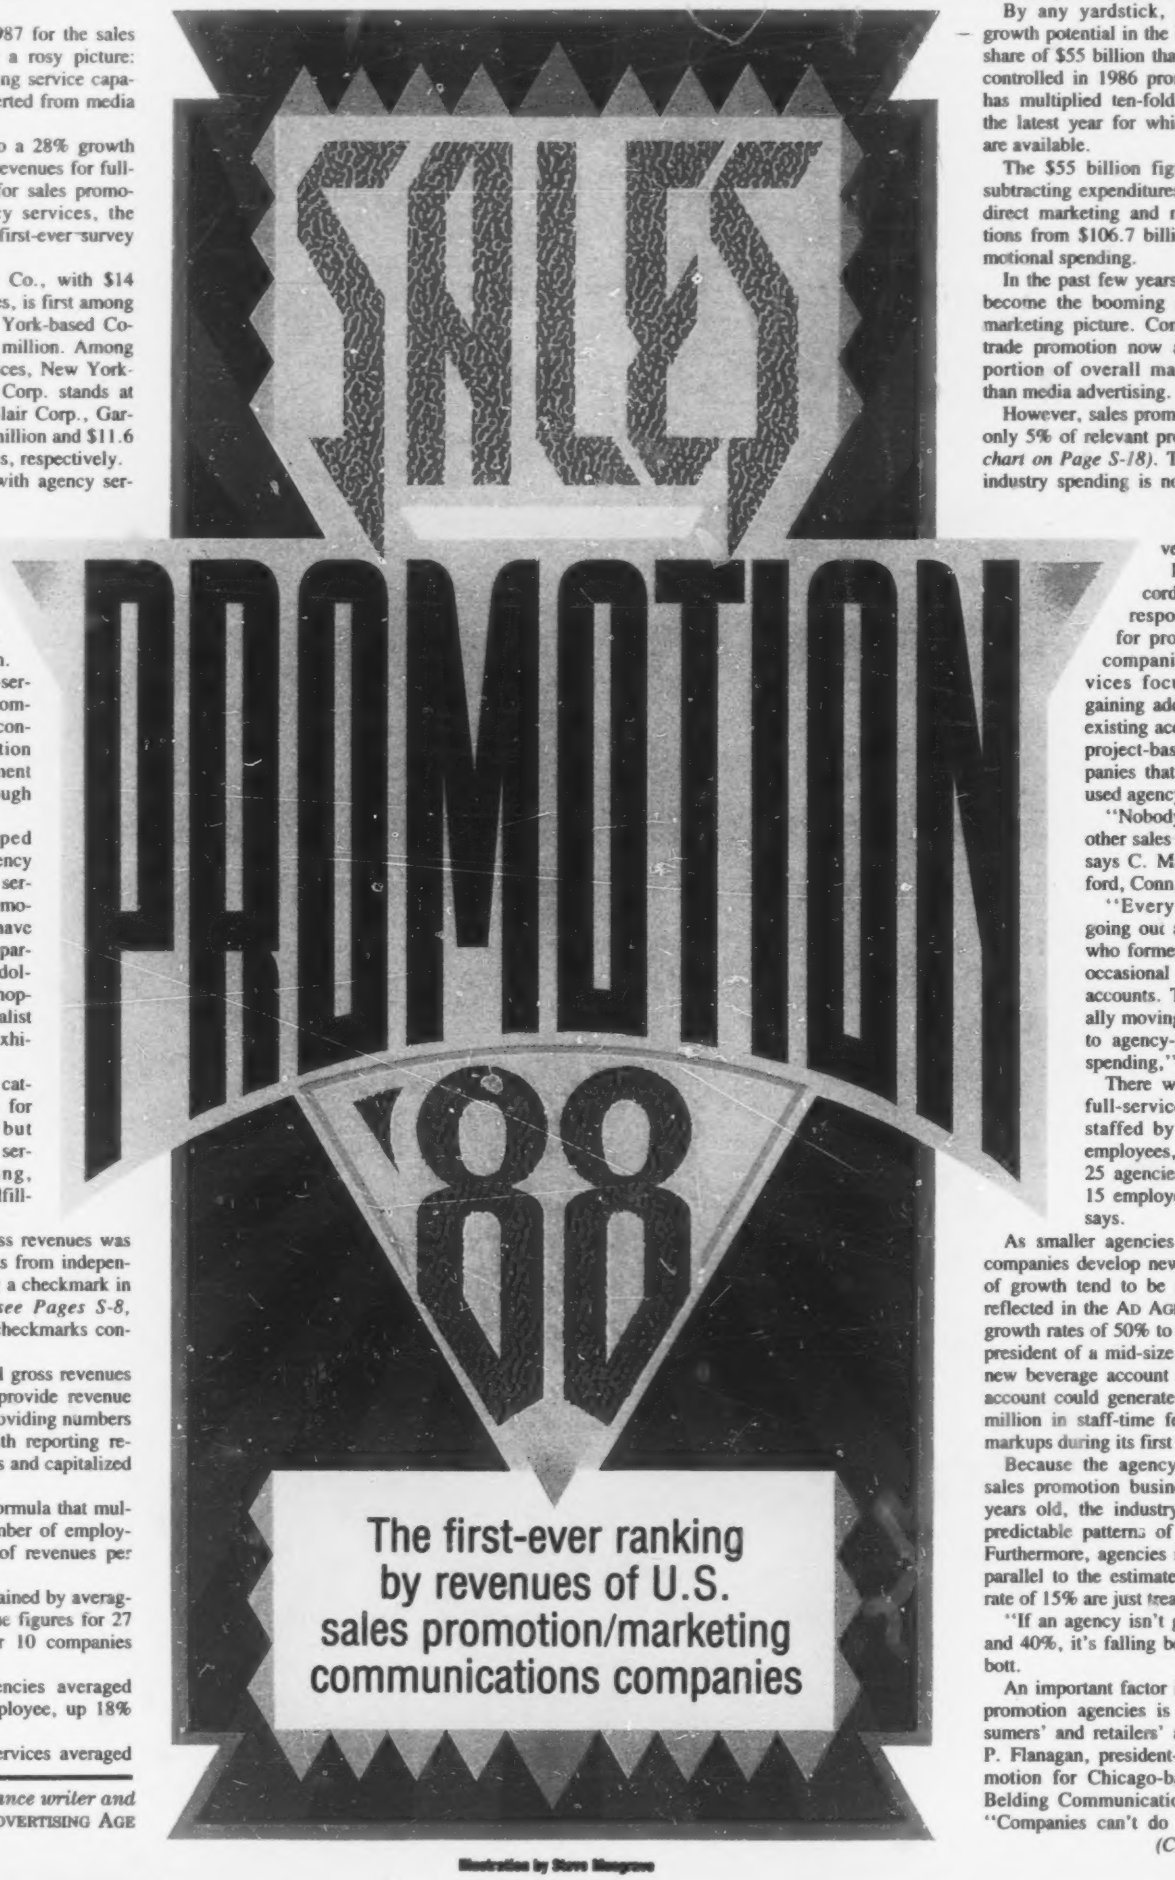
Growth robust for promo shops

By Richard Edel



The first-ever ranking by revenues of U.S. sales promotion/marketing communications companies

Illustration by Steve Musgrave

A snapshot of the year 1987 for the sales promotion industry presents a rosy picture: double-digit growth, expanding service capabilities and more dollars diverted from media advertising.

These factors contribute to a 28% growth spurt in 1987 average gross revenues for full-service agencies, and 29% for sales promotion companies with agency services, the two groups profiled in this first-ever survey by ADVERTISING AGE.

Chicago-based Frankel & Co., with $14 million in 1987 gross revenues, is first among agencies, followed by New York-based Comart Associates, with $12.9 million. Among companies with agency services, New York-based American Consulting Corp. stands at the top, followed by D.L. Blair Corp., Garden City, N.Y., with $13.7 million and $11.6 million in 1987 gross revenues, respectively.

Agencies and companies with agency services are ranked separately by gross revenues, defined as billings to clients from staff-time fees, markups and commissions less all outside costs for services such as printing and execution.

For inclusion in the "full-service agency" rankings, a company must provide impartial consulting for clients' promotion planning, creative development and creative execution through production.

Respondents are grouped among "companies with agency services" if, as part of their services, they provide sales promotion consulting, but tend to have a specialty or bias toward a particular technique or methodology, such as No. 10, the Shopping Center Network, a specialist in creating and placing mall exhibits.

Also included in the latter category are companies known for their sales promotions, but equally well known for other services, such as advertising, graphic arts, printing and fulfillment.

Verification of agency gross revenues was provided by signed statements from independent auditors, and denoted by a checkmark in the agency's box listing (see Pages S-8, and S-10). Profiles without checkmarks contain unverified figures.

ADVERTISING AGE estimated gross revenues for companies that did not provide revenue figures, and for companies providing numbers that were not compatible with reporting requirements, such as total sales and capitalized billings.

Estimates are based on a formula that multiplies the agency's total number of employees by an industry average of revenues per employee.

Industry averages were obtained by averaging employee-to-gross revenue figures for 27 full-service agencies and for 10 companies with agency services.

In 1987, full-service agencies averaged $91,000 in revenues per employee, up 18% over 1986.

Companies with agency services averaged $78,000 per employee in 1987, up 10%.

By any yardstick, there is tremendous growth potential in the industry. The relevant share of $55 billion that full-service agencies controlled in 1986 promotional expenditures has multiplied ten-fold since 1976; 1986 is the latest year for which complete statistics are available.

The $55 billion figure was obtained by subtracting expenditures for trade promotion, direct marketing and meetings and conventions from $106.7 billion in 1986 total promotional spending.

In the past few years, sales promotion has become the booming sector of the overall marketing picture. Combined consumer and trade promotion now accounts for a larger portion of overall marketing expenditures than media advertising.

However, sales promotion agencies control only 5% of relevant promotional dollars (see chart on Page S-18). The remaining 95% of industry spending is now controlled by corporations, and, to a lesser extent, by advertising agencies.

For this reason, according to AD AGE survey respondants, sales efforts for promotion agencies and companies with agency services focused most often on gaining additional business from existing accounts and developing project-basis accounts at companies that in the past have not used agency services.

"Nobody's losing business to other sales promotion agencies," says C. Martin Abbott, a Stamford, Conn.-based consultant.

"Every year agencies are going out and converting clients who formerly used them only as occasional suppliers into regular accounts. The industry is gradually moving from client-managed to agency-managed promotional spending," he says.

There were an estimated 225 full-service agencies in 1987, staffed by an average of 15.5 employees, compared with about 25 agencies in 1976, staffed by 15 employees each, Mr. Abbott says.

As smaller agencies and sales promotion companies develop new accounts, their rates of growth tend to be much higher. This is reflected in the AD AGE survey, with several growth rates of 50% to 100% appearing. One president of a mid-size agency working on a new beverage account told AD AGE that the account could generate well in excess of $1 million in staff-time fees, commissions and markups during its first year.

Because the agency phenomenon in the sales promotion business is only about 10 years old, the industry has not settled into predictable patterns of growth, experts say. Furthermore, agencies reporting growth rates parallel to the estimated underlying industry rate of 15% are just treading water.

"If an agency isn't growing between 25% and 40%, it's falling behind," says Mr. Abbott.

An important factor in the growth of sales promotion agencies is competition for consumers' and retailers' attention, says Joseph P. Flanagan, president-director of sales promotion for Chicago-based Foote, Cone & Belding Communications' Impact division. "Companies can't do it all in-house today and expect to get a competitive edge. Simply relying on [free standing inserts] isn't enough; there's a lot of clutter out there. They need a fresh, creative approach, which is what an agency provides."

Given the enormous growth potential of individual agencies and the sales promotion industry in general, it is not surprising that interest in acquiring sales promotion agencies is at an all-time high.

Mirroring a trend among advertising agencies, six sales promotion agencies were acquired in 1987 and early 1988. Plans were announced in March 1988 for acquisition of four leading U.S. agencies by London-based FKB Group.

The four companies include Focus Marketing, Norwalk, Conn.; The Hermann Group, St. Louis; QLM Associates, Princeton, N.J., and The Saugatuck Group, Westport, Conn.

The four agencies will continue operating under their existing names and managements.

Other acquisitions include London-based KLP Group's June 1987 buyout of New York-based Comart Associates for an initial price of $5 million cash and KLP shares, with a total price of up to $20 million by 1990, depending on Comart's profitability.

London-based Clarke Hooper also purchased for an undisclosed price Newport Beach, Calif.-based Joseph Potacki & Associates in mid-1987.

Ownership by big advertising agency groups can be a business boon for sales promotion agencies, assuming the shops remain free to pursue their own accounts. The trickle-down effect of clients and referrals from parent companies was a positive force in 1987 for Young & Rubicam's Cato Johnson, New York, Grey Advertising's Beaumont-Bennett, New York, and FCB's Impact.

For example, Mr. Flanagan says, Impact has gained project-basis assignments from Adolph Coors Co., Golden, Colo., as a result of FCB's agency relationship with the company.

Mike Zisser, chairman of Beaumont-Bennett, says his agency's relationship with Grey has created greater "value marketing" for clients such as Uniroyal-Goodrich. "We are able to stay within the brand character and overall image and translate that to sales promotion," he says.

Having a general agency for a parent does not shield the sales promotion agency from normal business cycles, however. Sage Worldwide Promotions division of New York-based Ogilvy & Mather terminated 22 employees in March following an account loss, by Sage, which the agency declined to disclose.

Robert White, senior VP at O&M and managing director of Sage, says the O&M relationship has catapulted Sage into a large agency in a matter of seven months.

Access to O&M's research, strategy and contacts has helped develop such key accounts as American Express.

"O&M gives us instant credibility. If this was Bob White Inc. nobody would care," Mr. White says.

The ADVERTISING AGE survey, made with the assistance of the New York-based Council of Sales Promotion Agencies, provided a variety of first-ever statistics. A summary of a few key findings follows:

- The survey asked respondents to break out hourly rates for several personnel categories. Per hour 1987 rates are listed here as high/average/low figures by category: senior level account service $300/$132/$75; average level account service $180/$87/$55; senior level creative $200/$122/$75; average level creative $150/$82/$47; other senior level service $220/$97/$55; other average level service $150/$61/$35 (For more average rates, see Page S-26).
- Top cities by gross revenues: New York was No. 1 for both full-service agencies and companies with agency services, with $48.7 million and $50.7 million in 1987 gross revenues, respectively. Chicago was No. 2 for agencies, with $48.2 million in gross revenues. Garden City, N.Y., was No. 2 for companies with agency services with $11.6 million (See chart on Page S-32).
- Total employees by personnel category: The typical full-service agency responding to the ADVERTISING AGE survey had 53 employees divided into: 15 account service, 12 creative, seven production, 10 administrative/clerical, and nine other. The agency has added seven employees since 1986, with three in creative, one in production and three in other categories (See chart on Page S-30).
- The relationship between agency gross revenues and "pass-through" revenues, defined as clients' money that agencies spend for services such as printing, production and postage, was examined. Of 14 agencies with pass-through revenues exceeding gross revenue, the combined revenues ratio was $75.2 million pass through to $31.8 million gross ($2.40 to $1).

Of 15 agencies with pass-through revenues that were less than gross revenues, the combined revenues ratio was $39.2 million pass through to $68.4 million gross ($0.6 to $1).

- As with advertising agencies, the ability of sales promotion agencies to provide an expanding range of service capabilities presents new opportunities. One frequently mentioned trend in the survey was the 1987 growth in regional marketing capabilities.

According to several executives at agencies adding new office locations in 1987, the object was to tailor promotional campaigns to the needs of each region. Another objective was to increase market share by targeting accounts not currently using agency services.

Several agency executives also set objectives for 1988 that included establishing integrated advertising, promotion and direct marketing. By integrating promotion and advertising and other communications, the agency creates for consumers a single impression of client's products and services.

This synergistic approach to marketing communications is the point of difference for a few big sales promotion agencies.

Readers' guide to agency profiles

Acme Promotion & Marketing, a fictional agency headquartered in Minneapolis, answered a questionnaire sent by Ad Age in mid-January. If the editors had not heard from Acme by the questionnaire filing deadline on Feb. 15, they contacted the agency. If there was still no response and Acme had gross revenues of $1 million or more, the agency was telephoned for a response.

The ✓ in the boxtop means the agency received the signature of an independent accountant verifying gross revenue figures supplied to Ad Age. See Pages S-8 and S-10 for more information.

- Gross revenues: Agencies are ranked by gross revenues, which gives a better indication of an agency's size than billings. Gross revenue figures generally are derived from three sources: the money an agency makes from staff-time fees for consulting and execution of sales promotion programs; a 17.65% markup for materials and services billed the client; and commissions on outside services purchased by the agency.

Gross revenues is defined as total billings to clients less all outside costs, such as printing, production, postage, etc. Also listed in the box is the agency's total number of employees, or employees involved in sales promotion activities, as in the case of subsidiaries and divisions of larger companies. The box also lists the agency's number of office locations.

- Revenue contributors: Below the box is a breakdown of items contributing to the agency's gross revenues, including revenues from staff-time fees, and from commissions and markups.

- Volume passing through: An indication of the agency's economic power, this category provides a breakdown of client monies passing through the agency in the form of services purchased, such as printing, production, freight and fulfillment, or special items, such as incentives, prizes, and postage. Other categories might include advertising media, licensing fees and consulting fees.

- Employees per department: This is a simplified breakdown of agency structure and staffing.

Ad Age based annual reviews on returned questionnaires and interviews with agency executives.

Key to profile information

Data in agency profiles was obtained from sales promotion agencies and companies with agency services that received and completed a questionnaire prepared by ADVERTISING AGE and mailed in January 1988.

Full-service agencies and companies with agency services were asked to provide gross revenues and dollar volume that "passed through" the agency, the latter identified as all outside costs not contributing directly to gross revenues and not provided in-house, i.e., printing, production and postage.

Gross revenues in this report were defined as the sum of revenues from staff-time fees and from commissions and markups for materials and services (usually 17.65%) billed the client.

Where the profile states gross revenues as an estimate, the estimate was provided by ADVERTISING AGE.

Estimates were based on a formula that multiplies the agency or company's total number of employees by an industry average of revenues per employee, obtained from a sampling of companies completing questionnaires.

Sales promotion agencies were asked to provide verification from an independent accountant for figures they reported. Those agencies providing a signature from an accountant or outside auditor are noted in this issue by a check mark within the box next to the profile of the agency.

Among full-service agencies, 56% complied, and 38% of the sales promotion companies with agency services complied.

The statement of verification follows:

> The undersigned, acting as outside accountant for the agency, confirms that the gross income figure indicated above for the year 1987 reflects totals as entered on the books of the company for the period reported.

Several variations of this statement were accepted including an adaptation of a more formal letter (See Page S-10) written in 1984 by the New York State Society of CPAs under the direction of Gene F. Gaughan, chairman of the advertising committee of the society, which is used for ADVERTISING AGE's U.S. Agency Income Report (March 30, 1988.)

CPA statement accepted

To promotion agency board of directors:

We (the accounting firm) have applied certain agreed-upon procedures, as discussed below, to the account records of (give name of agency) for the year ended Dec. 31, 1987, solely to assist you in preparing your statement to appear in the "1988 Report on Sale Promotion/Marketing Communications Agencies." It is understood that our report on your accounting records is solely for your information and is not to be referred to or distributed for any purpose to anyone who is not a member of management of your agency without our consent. You may attach a copy of this letter to your agency's report to ADVERTISING AGE.

Our procedure was to confirm total 1987 "gross revenues" of (the amount is given) shown on Line 1 of the sales promotion questionnaire agreed with the balances in general ledgers or other financial records maintained by your agency. Because the above procedure does not constitute an examination made in accordance with generally accepted auditing standards, we do not express an opinion on any of the accounts referred to above.

In connection with the procedure referred to above, no matters came to our attention that caused us to believe that "gross revenues" should be adjusted. Had we performed additional procedures or had we completed or made an examination of the financial statements in accordance with generally accepted auditing standards, matters might have come to our attention that would have been reported to you.

This report relates only to the accounts and items specified here and does not extend to any financial statements of your promotion agency taken as a whole.

Annual Review

Estimated 55% growth in 1987 gross revenues was based on expanded services to existing accounts and new business from Nestle, Actmedia and Creative Black Book. The addition of PepsiCo's Ice Mountain Great Spring Waters of America division and efforts to gain another beverage account are projected to generate 40% growth in 1988. Privately held CC&M's best promotion of 1987 was a winter display for Molson Golden and Molson Light. The display secured extra retail display space and distributor support during the vital holiday season and will be repeated for a third consecutive year in 1988. CC&M is agency of record for Martlet Importing, U.S. importer of Molson beer and ale.

Annual Review

Continued growth in spending by existing clients and the addition in 1986 of Haagen-Dazs Co., and in 1987 of the Haagen-Dazs Shoppe Co. accounted for an estimated 21% increase in gross revenues in 1987. The focus on Haagen-Dazs resulted in Columbian's best promotion of 1987, launching Haagen-Dazs Special Additions, a line of chunky, mixed ice cream products targeted to a younger audience. Why Regional Marketing can help you reach the right target the right way.

It's tougher than ever for marketers to stay competitive if they only play by the traditional rules. The rise of scanner data, shrinking shelf-space and changing life-styles reap havoc on national marketing plans—what excels in Rome, New York may bomb in Rome, Georgia. Today's markets simply demand a new look at local strategies and solutions.

Does Regional Marketing guarantee a competitive advantage?

IMPACT, one of the most experienced promotion agencies in the world of regional marketing, can help you determine this. We've helped pioneer the category with innovative programs for Pepsi-Cola, Frito-Lay and Campbell Soup Company. Our 30-minute presentation on the trends, effects and future of regional marketing will show how you can capitalize on your local market opportunities.

Although the product was targeted at a trendy market segment, the agency was careful to maintain the Haagen-Dazs image of quality and heritage to all age groups. Annual Review

The agency was reorganized following its purchase on June 1, 1987, by KLP Group, London, the world's largest network of independent sales-promotion agencies with operations in 17 countries. The buyout had immediate benefits with the assignment of new business from American Express Canada, supported by KLP agencies in Toronto and Montreal. Revenues grew 9% in 1987 with the biggest dollar volume coming from commissions and markups; dollar volume passed through the agency jumped 41% in 1987. About 70% of 1987 gross revenues were the direct result of sales promotion activites. The agency predicts 12% growth in 1988, 60% of that from new business and 40% from existing business. Named AD AGE'S sales promotion agency of the year in 1987, Comart lived up to its reputation with a campaign executed for the Clarion Hotel, New Orleans, that boosted occupancy from 19% to 65% in 18 months.

Annual Review

Estimated gross revenues were up 19% in 1987 as Core Group added MasterCard International to an assortment of package goods, health and beauty aids, and durable goods accounts. In 1987, Core also began targeting travel and leisure, telecommunications, mass merchandising, and financial service accounts. Illustrating its approach to developing innovative programs with marketing leverage was Core's best promotion of 1987, a consumer travel incentive program for MasterCard International's Gold Card that automatically awarded frequent user prizes through participating MasterCard member banks. Program objectives included differentiating MasterCard from competing credit cards, leveraging the credit assocation's clout with banks, and providing consumers with frequent use incentives. A tiered award structure gave increasingly valuable prizes for charges for airfare, vehicle rental and hotel stays. Also in 1987, the agency moved to a new headquarters in Eden Prairie, Minn., from its former site in Minnetonka, Minn.

revenue from such new accounts as James B. Beam Distilling Co., Miller Brewing Co. and Quaker Oats contributed to a 30% increase in 1987 gross revenues. The agency projects 20% growth in 1988, divided evenly between new and existing accounts. Best of 1987 was a multiple-brand holiday tie-in between Kraft and Hasbro Industries offering rebates on toys and food purchases and appealing to mothers with young children. Unique because it did not tie-in related products, the program was designed to move consumers from the grocery store into toy stores and mass merchandisers, thus complementing the two companies' marketing goals. Also in 1987, the agency moved its headquarters from Northfield, Ill., to an area just north of Chicago's downtown.

Annual Review

Einson Freeman's gross revenues grew by 63% in 1987, as the agency added services and converted AT&T, Burger King and Eastman Kodak from a project fee basis to annual retainers. The agency projects 30% growth in 1988 with the conversion of two more accounts to retainers, and with added revenues from three sources: existing clients, expanded in-house research services, and a new special events marketing group. Charles Young, who joined the agency in 1986, now heads the new ventures. The agency's most successful effort in 1987 was a "Fly Air France Free" summer promotion, which increased the carrier's average passenger load factor to 80% in the promotional period from 62% over the same period in 1986, without fare cutting or deep discounts. In other areas, London-based WPP Group, which owns JWT Group, New York, and other U.S. ad agencies, is rumored to be interested in buying the privately held agency.

New clients included Sears Roebuck, Commonwealth Edison, Oster, Morton Salt and General Foods. Flair showed a special touch in 1987 with an innovative promotion for the American Dairy Association, "The best deserve a little pat of butter," the first-ever multimarketer tie-in between General Foods, General Mills, Pillsbury and Bays English Muffin. Supported by a $12 savings booklet, in-store cross merchandising, advertising, pr, FSIs and retailer incentives, the promotion demonstrated Flair's strengths in bringing partners together, allowing them to share program costs, and coordinating all elements of the marketing mix.

Annual Review

London-based FKB Group announced in March 1988 plans to acquire Focus as part of a purchase of four U.S. sales promotion agencies, all of which will continue operations under their old names and managements. The total deal cost FKB $11.9 million cash and $1 million in shares. Additional payments over five years of up to $46.8 million depend on individual companies' performances. FKB has agreed to pay $3.9 million in cash for Focus, and up to $15 million in future payments, depending on profitability. Meanwhile, new accounts in financial services, soft drinks, soap products and liqueurs boosted Focus' gross revenues by 22% in 1987. Most of the added revenue came from 43% growth in commissions and markups. Focus projects 5% to 10% growth in volume from retainer accounts in 1988 and 20% growth from new clients. The agency's best of 1987 was a "Save the Eagles" promotion for Miller Beer. The project not only increased sales and enhanced brand image, but identified closely with Miller's "Made in the U.S.A." ad message, which has been effective with the brand's target audience. To handle growing business volume, the agency in 1987 added seven employees in account and creative services, and doubled office space by moving into a new Norwalk headquarters.

Annual Review

The year 1987 was one of adversity and new beginnings for Frankel & Co. In May, fire destroyed one of two floors at headquarters, resulting in the death of an employee and forcing temporary relocation of accounting and creative departments. In 1987, the company took a step toward becoming national by opening an office near Los Angeles, complementing its operation in Norwalk. Although gross revenues grew only 2.2% in 1987, the company's outlook brightened with the addition of several blue-chip accounts. Frankel's 1987 gross revenues include $2.8 million in direct response billings. Frankel anticipates 25% growth in 1988, split evenly between new and existing clients. The company's most successful promotion of 1987 was for McDonald's, featuring a tie-in with Muppet Babies, a top-rated Saturday a.m. TV show. One in a series of Happy Meals, premiums included four plastic vehicles featuring the characters. The 25-year-old privately held company adopted the theme "people behind people" to represent its outlook on the future.

Annual Review

An agreement was announced in March 1988 for acquisition of The Hermann Group by London-based FKB Group as part of a purchase of four U.S. sales-promotion agencies, all of which will continue operations under their old names and managements. The total deal cost FKB $11.9 million cash and $1 million in ordinary shares. Additional payments over five years of up to $46.8 million depend on individual companies' performances. For Hermann Group, FKB is paying $2 million cash and $1 million FKB ordinary shares, in addition to future payments of up to $12.5 million, depending on the agency's profitability. The sale is contingent on Hermann Group's audited 1987 profits being not less than $425,000. The agency suffered a setback in 1987 from the loss of the Anheuser-Busch account. However gross revenues grew 5% in 1987 from a variety of new account gains. For 1988, the agency projects 25% growth, divided equally between existing and new

If an army of robots can't convince you, take it from millions of furry little bears:

THE IMAGE GROUP produces sales promotion commercials that work.

In 1986, a major fast food operation hired THE IMAGE GROUP to produce a sales promotion TV commercial. It was the most successful effort in the chain's history. Millions of toy robots were released – with purchase – to kids coast to coast. In 1987, THE IMAGE GROUP helped beat that record by moving even more toy bears than robots. Amazing.

Or maybe not so amazing. After all, THE IMAGE GROUP is a unique production company. We specialize in sales promotion television commercials that get surprisingly good results at surprisingly low budgets. And we handle any one part or all of your production – storyboards to casting to filming to editing to finish.

If you're new to broadcast – or if your commercials haven't been as successful as you like – remember. Millions of bears can't be wrong. THE IMAGE GROUP does work that works.

A simply amazing offer

Just call to see a videotape of our award-winning commercials. Then we'll give you a 10% discount on your first job. It's that simple – now isn't that amazing?

Annual Review

Gross revenues grew 9% in 1987, mostly from 15% growth in staff-time fees. Drawing heavily on referrals within existing accounts, the agency projects 40% growth in 1988. Highland's best promotion of 1987 involved trade and consumer programs supporting the national launch of Murine Contact Lens Care Products for Ross Laboratories, the consumer products division of Abbott Laboratories. The project included development of sales aids, floorstands and introductory free-standing inserts. Also in 1987, Highland was named sales promotion agency of record for Ross Labs consumer products, and assigned sales promotion strategic planning for Murine. Other new assignments included trade promotion programs for Beiersdorf's Nivea brand, and sales promotion programs for Globus Laboratories division of Nestle Foods.

Annual Review

A 48% spurt in 1987 gross revenues resulted from increased activity on accounts gained in 1986, such as Citicorp Savings of Illinois, Hyatt Hotels and Hasbro, and increased activity from existing accounts, such as M&M/Mars and Brown Forman. The agency lost Coca-Cola Foods when that company moved its promotions in-house. New accounts in 1987 included American Dairy Assn. In 1988, the agency expects to grow 20%, primarily through expanded services to existing clients. To handle increased business, the privately held unit of MCA grew to 50 employees in 1988.

"We help keep P&G on top. Because we track the competition in every paper... in every market."

Through the years, no one in package goods has established a track record like P&G.

They've done it by making a lot of smart decisions, many based on the priceless information in the nation's daily and Sunday newspapers.

Competitive expenditures, new products, new creative, coupon values—it's all there. And for the past 56 years, ACB, exclusively, has read these hundreds of papers for P&G . . . every day . . . then sent them detailed reports. So whatever the competition is doing in any of their product categories, P&G knows it. And they've used it to make many of the decisions that have helped them reach the age of 150 still in their prime.

Only ACB covers so much ground.
Like P&G, ACB knows that covering just the top 50 or 100 markets isn't always good enough. So we offer unmatched in-depth coverage. And we do it for less than others charge to cover fewer markets.

You get more than just top line research.
You'll know which key accounts are using your ads, or your competition's. In newspapers and magazines. How well your sales force is performing. A complete overview of what's going on today, what the trends are for tomorrow. ACB's standard research package—or one tailored specifically for you—delivers the detail.

For total information that can keep you on top, call ACB Research at 1-800-638-8333.

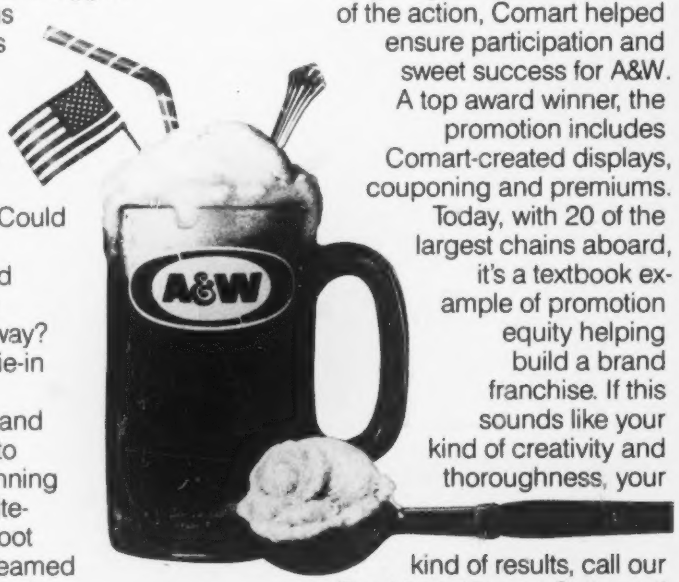
How Comart motivated the top food chains to back an A&W® promotion for five years running!

Why should America's biggest supermarket chains give away precious space for another soft drink promotion? That's the question our long-time client, A&W Root Beer, asked. Could Comart create a program that would motivate majors to sign on—in a big way?

We arranged a tie-in with private label ice cream makers and created what was to become a long-running classic. The appetite-appealing "A&W Root Beer Float" drive teamed the A&W brand with the stores' own-label vanilla ice cream.



By giving retailers their piece of the action, Comart helped ensure participation and sweet success for A&W. A top award winner, the promotion includes Comart-created displays, couponing and premiums. Today, with 20 of the largest chains aboard, it's a textbook example of promotion equity helping build a brand franchise. If this sounds like your kind of creativity and thoroughness, your kind of results, call our President, Vincent Sottosanti in New York (212)-714-2550.

Annual Review

Gross revenues fell 7% in 1987 as the agency encountered stiff competition coupled with the loss of Paddington and Parker Brothers. Commissions were off 12% and staff-time fees were down 4% for the year. However, the agency expects to grow 20% in 1988 with the addition of new accounts, such as First Brands, Texize and Pitney Bowes. The agency's best promotion of 1987 targeted heavy users of Duracell batteries. Because 20% of battery users account for nearly 80% of volume, and Duracell frequently uses rebate offers, the agency targeted users who had responded to past and current rebate offers, sending them a direct response rebate offer featuring an advertising message, rebate check, premium offer and future purchase incentive.

"MAY YOU LIVE DURING INTERESTING TIMES."

— Old Scottish curse

These are interesting times indeed for business. Demands are growing, yet the means to satisfy those demands are not. And marketers are left with a sobering challenge: Do more with less. Less money. Less time. Less reward. Less margin for error.

Some call it the New Efficiency—shorthand for a growing realization that in today's marketing environment, success depends on making the most of all available resources.

For TCA, the New Efficiency isn't new at all. It is merely a label for the way we've been doing business for more than 20 years—and the reason that these interesting times for business are very good times for TCA. Not to mention our clients.

Find out how our way of doing business can benefit yours. Give Lou Boroff a call today at 203-531-3600, and let us show you how we can help turn these interesting times into a blessing, not a curse.

WINNING MOVES

In today's changing marketplace, re-thinking your game plan to increase your marketing dollar effectiveness is a necessity.

To quote three-time U.S. Open chess champion, I. A. Horowitz, "An opening move in chess should be based on ideas and methods." Of average players he further states, "My chief impression is that they lack driving force; they haven't learned to hit hard."

S.P.I. believes this philosophy holds true in the marketplace.

If you're not satisfied with the marketing solutions you're receiving, if those solutions aren't hard hitting, you need the services of Strategic Promotions, Inc.

Just like the knight in chess, you will find us innovative and omnidirectional, giving you the advantage of commanding every square on your marketing "game" board.

S.P.I. is proud of its strategic role in our clients' winning moves.

There are four services vital to your promotional success. Get them in a fully integrated system, or get them à la carte. But get them from the best-qualified single source.

Sage Worldwide Promotion

Sage Worldwide Promotion companies comprise four separate but closely interrelated services—the four essential components for an effective, contemporary stance in an age where "retail" is king.

1. The brilliant promotional idea—the one that adds value to your brand—is simple, on strategy and dramatic enough to capture your market's imagination. Promotional Campaigns, Inc., our traditional sales promotion company (the kind that develops ideas, offers and promotional plans) has a long and successful history of first-class results.

2. Effective translation in the store. The right retail materials can make a 300 percent sales difference. Thomson-Leeds, Inc., our retail environment and point-of-purchase company, has the industry's best track record. More awards. More firsts. (They have invented entire categories of retail displays.) Best of all, for 30 years they've proven they can get shoppers involved with your brands in the store.

3. Making it happen in the field. The most able field merchandising organization in the country, Alert Marketing, Inc., has 3,200 professionals who function as your on-the-spot auxiliary retail force. They install displays. They sample and coupon, restock shelves, take reorders, prepare computerized sales and competitive reports, plus lots more. AMI knows the markets. Whatever you need done in the field, they'll do it right.

4. Trouble-free execution and fulfillment. Promotion Marketing Services, Inc., our execution and fulfillment professionals, reduce your risk by helping you set up strategic controls for these two important functions in the planning stage. They know the legalities of sweepstakes and games, what a rebate or refund should return, and how to limit couponing liability. They can source premiums worldwide and have sophisticated telemarketing personnel on staff. They also offer more data base and UPC code data on promotion redemption details than any other fulfillment house, so you can count on greater effectiveness.

Have it your way.

You can use our services bundled or separately, as you need them. However you use us, our operating procedures, point of view and desire to do the best possible job are the same. Our system is based on teamwork, with a key executive in charge of all the work you give us. This team leader orchestrates the various services so they all function together. Easy to say, hard to do. Our clients seem to like the results.

Over to you.

We're anxious to prove we're as good as our word. In a business where dollar effectiveness is the final judge, it's the only way. Whether you want the promotion idea good enough to hang a whole campaign on, a display that stops traffic in the store, 3,000 pre-Halloween store calls, or an automatic and foolproof rebate system, we can help.

For more information on Sage Worldwide Promotion and how we can make a real difference in your bottom line, call Bob White at (212) 503-6301 today.

New business from Frito-Lay, Plough and R.J. Reynolds, new products and services and a growing staff contributed to 44% growth in 1987. Privately held PMC projects 30% growth in 1988. Key events in 1987: roll-out of Seal-Secure, a printing process encapsulating in-pack coupons and premiums in FDA-approved plastic (targeted to markets such as frozen food, package goods and pet food); opening of a banking/financial services unit; and addition of two vps.

Annual Review

An agreement was reached in March 1988 for acquisition of QLM by London-based FKB Group as part of a purchase of four U.S. sales-promotion agencies, all of which will continue operations under their old names and managements. The total deal cost FKB $11.9 million cash and $1 million in shares. Additional payments over five years of up to $46.8 million depend on individual companies' performances. FKB agreed to pay $3 million cash for QLM, with future payments of up to $20.2 million over five years, depending on QLM's profitability. Buoyed by the acquisition of 13 new accounts, QLM's 1987 gross revenues skyrocketed 87%. The biggest share of growth came from an increase of more than $4 million in staff-time fees, and an additional $1 million in commissions and markups. To accommodate increased volume, QLM added 28 employees in 1987, mostly in creative and account service departments, and changed administration to a creative group concept. The agency also added in-house photography and computerized its estimating and scheduling. For 1988, QLM projects 50% growth, mostly from existing clients. In new business, the agency is targeting fast food, financial services and consumer package goods. The agency in 1988 plans to open a west coast office to service newly-won business.

Annual Review

The addition of several new accounts more than offset the loss of United Airlines as the agency's gross revenues grew by 12% in 1987. Robinson in 1987 became agency of record for four accounts. The company anticipates 20% growth in 1988, with a portion coming from new accounts, domestic (particularly from the West Coast) and international expansion, and new services, such as special events and target/database marketing, field marketing and pr. In 1987, the agency singled out three of its own best promotions, including: Stroh's Sundance Sparkler/Fuji bicycle "Team Up with a Winner" sweepstakes; a Federal Express "Express Marketing" card program, which targeted employes of corporate users by offering discounts on personal air express services; and Miles Lab's Glass Works "Less Work" sweepstakes, which used a special FSI-decoder that encouraged consumers to examine the product on the shelf to determine if they had won; it moved the product to No. 1 in several markets.

There is more "Opportunity Calling" at Roger Merchandising than the agency's recently completed campaign for AT&T. As a subsidiary since 1984 of Young & Rubicam, AD AGE's #1 agency for two consecutive years, Rogers experienced 19% growth in 1987 gross revenues, most of which came from a 25% increase in in staff-time fees. The agency projects new growth in 1988 from accounts held by Y&R and subsidiary Burson Marsteller, specifically AT&T, M&M/Mars, General Foods, Midas and Jiffy Lube. Among the agency's most

Sage was formed in 1987 as a holding company from the affiliation of four Ogilvy Group companies, including Promotional Campaigns (formerly O&M Promotion), Promotion Marketing Services, Thomson-Leeds and Alert Marketing, the latter two acquired in the last half of 1987. New York-based Promotional Campaigns is a full-service promotion agency. Promotion Marketing, Southberry, Conn., is a fulfillment company. Thomson-Leeds, New York, manufactures retail displays. Alert, Waterberry, Conn., is a retail field merchandiser. Adding partial year results from T-L and Alert, revenues grew 30% over those of O&M's promotion subsidiaries in 1986, mainly from staff-time fees. For 1988, Sage anticipates a 107% increase in gross revenues, with 83% of growth coming from the addition of full-year results of T-L and Alert, and 17% from growth in volume with existing accounts. Key new business gains in 1987 included American Express, AT&T, Ford, General Foods, Lever Bros. and Sears. Sage also was recognized in 1987 by AD AGE as one of the top five promotion companies in the U.S.

Annual Review

Bouyed by the introductory promotion and design package that helped push Seagram wine coolers into the No. 1 spot past Bartles & James, privately held Siebel/Mohr reported 11% growth in 1987 gross revenues. The agency, which has worked for Seagram since its inception in 1969, projects 25%-plus growth in 1988, mostly from new accounts in consumer products, such as Sunshine Biscuits and Wendover's of England, both added in 1987. Key 1987 changes included creation of an event marketing group, addition of an in-house studio, and hiring of two senior vps in charge of creative and account services. Frederick Siebel assumed the post of chairman, while Thomas McCann moved into the presidency.

WE'RE NOT NORMAL.

At Coddington, Chadwick & Meyerson, we tend to discourage the ordinary. The fact is, we're obsessed with finding new ways of communicating that capture the imagination, command attention and produce results.

We deliver fully-integrated sales promotion programs that sometimes startle people, often make them see things in a new light and always move them to react.

The decision is yours. You could use other agencies who won't take your business quite so personally. Or you could talk to us and begin to get marketing solutions that are anything but normal.

Annual Review

Gross revenues tripled in 1987 on the strength of $1.6 million in 1987 revenues from commissions and markups compared with $426,000 in 1986, the privately held agency reported. Staff-time fees also leaped in 1987. The gains were mainly due to the agency gaining as an account in 1986 the Merico Food Service division of Anheuser-Busch. Key events affecting the agency's growth in 1987 included downturns in the regional economy, which stimulated usage of promotions, growth in business in the food service industry, and improved efficiency through automation. The agency's best promotion of 1987 was a St. Patrick's Day program for Bennigan's that resulted in positive sales growth in an industry slump.

Annual Review

Gross revenues soared 250% in 1987 as ACC doubled personnel, took on major new accounts such as Adolph Coors, Kraft, Ralston Purina and R.J. Reynolds and acquired Sukon Group, a New York design firm, in March 1987 for $1.6 million. In November 1987, ACC acquired a Kansas City, Mo., franchise of American Advertising Distributors, a leading coupon franchiser. ACC, which went public in August 1987, generating capital for further expansion, projects 35% to 40% growth in 1988. A big effort in 1987 was expansion of the agency's zone management system, dividing the U.S. into 12 fully staffed regions, each capable of customizing national programs in local markets. One of the agency's best efforts for 1987 was an interactive, in-store promotion for Nike where consumers played a "phaser" based target game with the object of winning free shoes. The promotion was one of Nike's most successful ever.

Annual Review

ADVERTISING AGE estimates D.L. Blair's gross revenues declined 17% in 1987. The privately held company reports revenue growth of 17% in 1987, reflecting one-time gains, and real growth between 9% and 11% in 1987. The company projects a 7% increase in revenues for 1988, divided evenly between new accounts, such as Mattel Toys, and increased spending by existing accounts. Last October's stock market crash is expected to have a negative impact on client budgeting and planning. Blair's best promotion of 1987 was "The Great American Key Hunt," a tie-in between leading Procter & Gamble brands (Pampers, Tide, Folgers, Bounty, Charmin, Crest and Downey) and Chevrolet (Corsica, Beretta and pick-up trucks). It was the largest ever consumer promotion combining package goods and automotive marketing. Other important events in 1987 included opening a Beverly Hills office, for greater service on the West Coast, and construction of new buildings in New York and Nebraska to meet projected growth needs through 1991.

Regional Promotion Doesn't Have To Be A Puzzle.

Regional promotions. They're powerful, productive... and definitely more fulfillment-intensive than national programs. More elements, more detail...more pieces that can fall between the cracks.

For over ten years, Promotion Activators has not only fulfilled major national programs... but quietly put the pieces together on dozens of local and regional promotions. Like a local radio tie-in promotion for Nestle, a Nabisco movie promotion on over forty college campuses, weekly retail drawings for Timberland and Citicorp, and state-wide sweepstakes for Budweiser.

If your promotion picture is taking on a more regional look, call us to see what a good fit we can be.

New accounts in 1987, especially Stroh, Prestone, Pizza Hut and Ocean Spray, contributed to 31% growth in 1987 gross revenues, according to AD AGE estimates. To handle increased volume, the agency's expanded staff 25%. The agency is projecting 35% growth in 1988, 70% of which is expected to come from existing clients and 30% from new accounts. A key personnel move in 1987 involved adding partner Arlen H. Kantarian, former vp-mktg of National Football League Properties, to head the agency's newly formed sports marketing division. A $50-value coupon offer on back to school items for Pizza Hut was the agency's best promotion of 1987. Participation fees from coupon advertisers paid for printing and agency services.

Annual Review

Riding the crest of wave in alternative marketing through sports, the arts and special events, DelWilber doubled gross revenues in 1987, adding $1 million each in staff-time fees, and commissions and markups. The privately held agency doubled in size, adding regional offices in New York and Port Chester, N.Y., the latter through acquisition of Hammond & Lalli, headed by principal John Hammond. A San Diego office also is planned this year. In 1988, Larry Albus, formerly director of Anheuser-Busch's Sports Marketing USA, joined the agency and heads the St. Louis office. Notable new accounts in 1987 included A-B, Procter & Gamble and Audi, leading to Audi's largest ever alternative marketing program. The agency's best promotion of 1987 was the National Hockey League All-Star balloting, co-sponsored by Dodge and Plymouth, which tied the automakers' "be the best" image with hockey's best players. The agency projects 75% growth in 1988, with 100% increases in revenues from sales promotion and regional programs, and a 75% increase in sponsorship marketing.

New business gains, especially Okidata, Morgan Furze liqueur and Head Racquet Sports, helped offset losses of several Paddington brands and Wiltshire Corp. The privately held agency reported a 30% boost in gross revenues for 1987, most of which came from a 30% rise in staff-time fees. The agency picked up Pan Am as a new account in 1988, and is projecting 25% growth for the year. Best of 1987 was a "Bring the Movie Home" co-promotion between Nestle and Fuji videocassettes offering free Nestle candy with videocassette purchase, with sweepstakes, coupon and incentive overlays.

Annual Review

M/W's strategy of doing everything in-house, including concept, execution and printing, paid off handsomely when Lever Bros. hired the agency in 1987 to help launch AIM Extra Strength toothpaste. The project drew upon virtually every agency service. AD AGE estimates gross revenues for M/W increased 9% in 1987. The agency is projecting 10% growth in 1988, mostly from new business. Adverse effects in 1987 were felt from a weakening U.S. dollar, which affected several clients' sales volumes. Mergers and acquisitions also had positive and negative effects on business. One strength was the agency's introduction of patented clip-hangers for POP flags and take-one pads.

MCM in 1987 saw 15% growth in revenues over 1986, resulting mainly from a 41% increase in commissions and mark-ups. The agency expects continued growth in 1988 from new accounts Citibank and Boeing Sikorsky. MCM was awarded a Clio for the best national consumer promotion of 1987, designed to move existing inventories of IBM PCs prior to the launch in April 1987 of the IBM System/2. The promotion featured all media, including unusual computer animation on diskette, and 3,000 freshly baked birthday cakes delivered simultaneously to IBM dealers. Annual Review

Estimated gross revenues grew 43% in 1987. However, the privately held agency reported sales in 1987 fell 12% to $12.9 million. Rising competition, devaluation of the U.S. dollar in foreign markets, the October stock market crash and child safety issues regarding in-pack premiums combined were factors. Niven Group also reported a 15% drop-off in staff-time fees and a 9% reduction in commissions and mark-ups in 1987. The agency projects 14% growth in 1988, based on increased business from existing accounts, such as Borden, Dial Corp., and Kellogg, the opening of a new sales office in Atlanta in 1987, and from new accounts now in development. To meet the needs of growth, the agency added 14 employees in 1987. Among the agency's best promotions developed in 1987 was Ortho's "Weed 'em & Reap" sweepstakes, now in retail outlets and wholesale clubs. The promotion aims to increase display space and encourage dealers to load inventory with multi-level trade incentives.

Propelled by strong growth from new accounts, such as Suzuki motorcycles, the Los Angeles Dodgers and The Los Angeles Times, gross revenues grew 35% in 1987. To accomodate growth, the agency added 18 employees and consolidated three locations into a new corporate headquarters. For 1988, the agency projects doubling in size, with 75% of the growth from existing clients and 25% from new accounts. Gross revenues grew 14% in 1987 as the agency expanded below the line marketing services and added key personnel. The agency projects a near doubling of revenues in 1988 as a result of significant investment in computerization. SAI's best of 1987 was a national promotion for Carnation's Friskies pet foods with the object of gaining in-store display space and building brand imagery. The agency generated computerized invitations for free pet examinations by local veterinarians to consumers returning coupons and proofs of purchase.

Annual Review

Growth in mall marketing among clients such as Adidas and Campbell Soup boosted SCN's gross revenues 8% in 1987. For 1988, the privately held mall-promotion specialist projects 15% to 25% growth from themed, multi-company projects, including Beautiful You, Better Homes & Gardens, and an expanded National Basketball Association mall tour featuring Jeep/Eagle, Converse, Lever Bros. and Allstate. Shopping Center Network's biggest ever mall promotion was a project for Campbell during January 1987 national soup month. With a task force of 30, SCN placed the event, constructed 22 exhibits, hired and trained personnel to promote and provide hot samples for 275,000 consumers in 88 markets. The four-weekend promotion reached more than 9 million shoppers.

Annual Review

Smiley showed 27% growth in 1987. Revenue gains by the privately-held agency came 70% from staff-time fees and 30% from increased commissions/markups. The agency anticipates 15% growth in 1988, mainly from multi-level sweepstakes, and special events, such as Murder Mystery programs, mainly used at trade shows and meetings. A weakening U.S. dollar and the October stock market crash actually improved some prospects for the agency in 1988 by increasing European business, and generating greater interest among U.S. financial institutions.

Ventura refocused operations on sales promotion in 1987, withdrawing from list brokerage management and commercial TV production. As a result, estimated revenues were down 33% in 1987, with a corresponding reduction of about 20 staff positions. The subsidiary of Mickelberry Corp. expects 15% to 20% growth in 1988, partly from expanded services to existing accounts and from adding the New York State Lottery account. A key personnel change occurred in August 1987 when founder Jeffrey Feinman, chmn-ceo, a pioneer in developing innovative sweepstakes promotions, left the agency to pursue other interests. Saatchi dismissal prompts look at all agencies

By JUDANN DAGNOLI

RJR Nabisco's abrupt firing of Saatchi & Saatchi DFS Compton may prompt a realignment of the company's entire agency roster.

The big winners could be FCB/Leber Katz Partners and Lowe Marschalk, two agencies on the food and tobacco conglomerate's current roster.

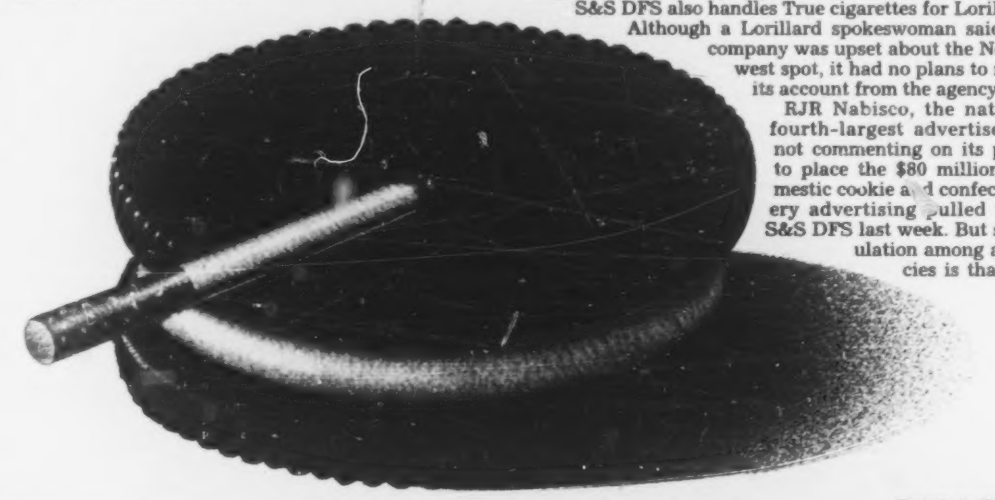

Illustration by Mark Frueh

RJR Nabisco fired S&S DFS in an apparent fit of pique over a TV commercial the agency created for its $55 million Northwest Airlines account. The spot shows passengers applauding the airline's in-flight smoking ban.

The commercial was only part of a $5 million effort lasting nine weeks. The "applause" commercial will end its run soon, to be replaced by a spot in which passengers send up a "Hip, hip, hooray" cheer.

S&S DFS also handles True cigarettes for Lorillard. Although a Lorillard spokeswoman said the company was upset about the Northwest spot, it had no plans to move its account from the agency.

RJR Nabisco, the nation's fourth-largest advertiser, is not commenting on its plans to place the $80 million domestic cookie and confectionery advertising pulled from S&S DFS last week. But speculation among agencies is that the company may shuffle other food brands in the process.

Most sources believe the company will keep the assignments at an existing RJR Nabisco agency but split the accounts differently.

The business up for grabs includes such plum assignments as Oreo and Chips Ahoy!, the two leading cookies in the U.S.; Bubble Yum and CareFree gums; and Life-Savers roll candy.

Media buying is not included because RJR handles that in-house.

Speculation is that FCB/Leber Katz, New York, agency for Salem, Vantage and More cigarettes, has the best shot at the Nabisco business. Agency Chairman-CEO Stanley Katz is known to have a close relationship with RJR.

See Editorial on P. 16 and related stories on P. 80, 81.

Mr. Katz said the agency has no conflicts in the baked goods and candy categories.

Lowe Marschalk, agency for Nabisco's grocery division, is believed to have been trying to attract more Nabisco businesses. The agency also handles public service announcements for the United Way, a favorite charity of F. Ross Johnson, RJR Nabisco president-ceo.

Other RJR Nabisco agencies don't seem to have as strong a chance at snaring the business.

McCann-Erickson Worldwide, which has Camel cigarettes plus the company's Del Monte line, is considered doubtful for more business because it already handles $80 million in baked goods for Nabisco.

Lord's new agency holds talks with IBM

By GARY LEVIN,
JON LAFAYETTE
and ALAN RADDING

IBM Corp.'s urgent marketing needs are forcing the giant computer company to do business with Lord, Einstein, O'Neill & Partners, the breakaway agency formed by six executives who abruptly left IBM agency Lord, Geller, Federico, Einstein.

See related stories on P. 68, 69 and 82.

The new agency, partly financed by Young & Rubicam, last week turned down an invitation to pitch another computer account, probably so it could take on a piece of IBM's $125 million U.S. advertising business.

Lord Einstein is up and running following a decision last week by the New York state Supreme Court that, to a great extent, allows it to go after just about any account, including those at Lord Geller.

The agency is actively pitching Saab-Scania of America, now reviewing its imported-car account at Ally & Gargano, New York.

Lord Einstein principals C. Ray Freeman, former exec VP-general manager of LGFE, and Kevin O'Neill, LGFE's former senior VP-creative director, met with IBM executives April 8 at IBM headquarters in Armonk, N.Y.

Both men were key players on the IBM account at LGFE.

"We're assuming there may be some work," said a source at Lord Einstein, adding that it was unlikely to be more than a project assignment.

Sources indicated that IBM asked Messrs. Freeman and O'Neill to finish projects left undone when they left LGFE on March 18, work that the remaining LGFE staffers were unable to handle.

IBM found the chaos left behind at LGFE had impaired that agency's ability to meet IBM's advertising needs on deadline, sources said.

And, as determined as IBM was to steer clear of the nasty courtroom battle between the two agencies, its executives decided the company's marketplace needs were overwhelming and that Messrs. Freeman and O'Neill were the only ones who could do the job.

It was unclear whether the project would lead to a permanent assignment for the new agency. Many observers believe the fracas has irritated conservative IBM to such a degree that when the dust settles, it may decide not to work

Talks resume in actors' strike

NEW YORK—Late-week talks between the ad industry and striking talent unions continued at press time as the two sides tried to end the unions' three-week walkout. Union and industry negotiators were trying to hammer out a compromise on talent pay for spots shown on cable TV. Both sides were expected to stay at the bargaining table until they had an agreement on a new commercials contract or until they hit another impasse. Negotiations broke off March 7, and the strike began March 21. Negotiations got back under way April 6 at the request of a federal mediator.

American Advertising Federation President Howard Bell has been called in to straighten out the "Addy-gate" scandal in Milwaukee.

That move comes as the reputation of the AAF's Addy Awards competition has been further sullied by a second incident involving alleged improprieties.

As a result, more questions are being asked about whether ad agencies are becoming overzealous in pursuing creative awards at the expense of clients.

The Houston Advertising Federation last week rescinded two Addys given to Beaumont, Texas-based Vance-Mathews after the HAF learned the award-winning TV commercials never ran.

Vance-Mathews President-CEO Herschel Mathews acknowledged the agency had erred by entering the commercials, which won a "Best of Show" and a gold, but claimed the mistake was unintentional.

The commercials were for Central Power & Light. The utility had discharged Vance-Mathews effective Oct. 15.

The agency claims it mistakenly assumed that Central Power carried out the media plan it had laid out. It had not.

"Our error was that we didn't go back to make sure the spots had aired as scheduled," Mr. Mathews said.

The questions raised about the Milwaukee Ad Club's Addy Awards competition have been more serious, more extensive and less easily resolved.

The problem began when other Milwaukee agencies questioned whether several dozen Addy-winning submissions had actually run or were paid for by the clients.

Among the ads questioned was a radio spot for the Laure Haile Dance Studio in Burbank, Calif., a commercial that took "Best of Show" honors in Milwaukee.

Hoffman York & Compton admitted it had sought out a prospective client for advertising it wished to produce but claimed the radio spot (part of a campaign for the studio that also included TV and print) did run (AA, March 14).

That has elicited cries of "foul" from several other Milwaukee agencies, angered that advertising for actual clients was competing with—and in some cases losing to—such "ersatz" advertising.

Two agency executives—Paul Counsell, chairman of Cramer-Krasselt Co., and Warren Eulgen, president of Kocs, Wesson & Associates—resigned as board members of the Milwaukee Ad Club after it failed to take any action.

Unable to decide whether Hoffman York & Compton and Frankenberry, Laughlin & Constable (the other Milwaukee agency with winners under scrutiny) should be allowed to keep their awards, the adclub last week appealed to the AAF's Council of Governors for help.

Mr. Bell, or perhaps another senior AAF official, is expected to review the commercials and ads that have been questioned, as well as the eligibility requirements, and issue an advisory opinion on how best to settle the controversy.

"We felt this was the only way to go, considering the circumstances," said Corinne Gaido, Milwaukee Ad Club president. "We simply do not have the impartial structure to conduct a fair and conclusive evaluation."

The controversy has continued. An unrepentant Hoffman York went so far as to place an ad in ADVERTISING AGE, offering cassettes of the disputed spot for $5.99 (AA, March 28).

Organizers of the Clio Awards competition last week said they had discovered that Hoffman York had submitted the Laure Haile advertising to them. They have decided to return the ads and the entry fees to Hoffman York.#

Ford switch in Mexico

JWT may be out

By STEPHEN DOWNER

MEXICO CITY—Just how strong the ties from Detroit bind local Ford Motor Co. operations will become clear if J. Walter Thompson Co. loses the Ford de Mexico account this month.

Sources say either Panamericana/Ogilvy & Mather or Young & Rubicam will get the $5 million-to-$7 million auto account.

John Ogden, president and general director of Ford here, got orders from Detroit to drop JWT, a former senior Ford executive said.

Mr. Ogden, however, told the parent company he didn't want to comply, indicating that he's happy with JWT efforts on Ford's behalf in Mexico, the source said.

A leading Ford marketing official in Mexico said "there is a chance that we may change [agencies]. We may continue with [JWT], but we may not."

Martin Sorrell, WPP Group's chief executive, came to Mexico last week to help ensure that WPP-owned JWT holds onto the important Ford account, sources say.

When asked [illegible] he was in Mexico, Mr. Sorre[illegible]d only say, "I'm basically dow[illegible] on client business."

The agency's creative director for the Ford account is Marco Antonio Bravo, a young, bilingual Mexican whose work is highly regarded.

Ford de Mexico Ad Manager Marcelo Leite, a Brazilian, has generously praised JWT's campaign for the Ford Taurus, which will be launched in Mexico this spring.

However, in three recent reviews for Ford Latin American business, JWT has only kept the Argentine account. In Venezuela, Corpa/-Ogilvy & Mather won. Salles/Inter-Americana gained the Brazilian account.

Ford de Mexico has troubles outside the ad business. The car marketer moved down from No. 4 to No. 5 of five major automakers here last year. Analysts blame an industrial dispute that paralyzed production at Ford's domestic plant just outside Mexico City for 110 days.

The troubles cost Ford 15,000 vehicles, Ford de Mexico's Mr. Ogden said, and most dealers were left without any vehicles to sell for several weeks.

Ford's wholesale sales in the first two months of 1988 were 1.4% below the same period last year, according to the Mexican Association of Automobile Dealers.#

It's not too late for Cuomo blitz

By STEVEN W. COLFORD

What if Mario Cuomo does run for president?

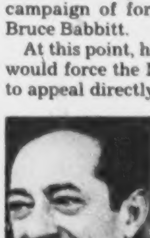
Even though the New York governor downplays the likelihood of his entering the presidential race, there is no dearth of ideas as to how the 55-year-old son of Italian immigrants might portray himself in a media campaign.

Campaign 88

A Cuomo candidacy would require a national media campaign, probably a monthlong blitz, said Sergio Bendixen, a Washington political consultant with Bendixen & Law who helped shape the failed campaign of former Arizona Gov. Bruce Babbitt.

At this point, he said, the late date would force the New York governor to appeal directly to voters via public opinion polls.



M. Cuomo

"He'd have to look at a national advertising campaign for three to four weeks to achieve what he'd need—to use the polls to convince delegates" to nominate him, Mr. Bendixen said.

Under Mr. Bendixen's media supervision, Gov. Babbitt broke presidential primary

USA Network's purchase of the "Murder, She Wrote" series, the highly rated CBS-TV vehicle starring Angela Lansbury, for an estimated $350,000 per episode sends a clear message to broadcasters and viewers that cable will spend what it needs to capture its niche in the market.

Cable halfway home, picking up speed

Service born of necessity cracks the magical 50% penetration mark and finally taps its potential with double-digit advertising and viewing growth

By Wayne Walley

"Buy more cable."

That was the simple recommendation of a recent Saatchi & Saatchi DFS Compton media bulletin sent to the New York-based agency's clients. But these days others than just Saatchi & Saatchi clients seem to be heeding the advice.

Nearly every ad-supported basic cable service, including Arts & Entertainment Cable Network, BET (Black Entertainment Television), CBN Cable Network, CNN, Discovery Channel, ESPN, Financial News Network, CNN Headline News, Lifetime Cabletelevision Network, MTV:Music Television, Nashville Network, Nickelodeon, SuperStation TBS, USA Network, VH-1: Video Hits One and Weather Channel, is coming off record ad sales in the fourth quarter of 1987 and expects the momentum to carry through 1988.

Lifetime President-CEO Thomas Burchill says his network will likely show a 40% increase in ad revenue this year while Paul Kagan Associates estimates ad sales for all cable networks will increase by an average of 20% to total a record

$1.06 billion in ad revenue in 1988.

"Six years ago we asked agencies and advertisers, 'When will the floodgates open?' 'When will you buy cable?' " says Douglas Greenlaw, senior VP-ad sales at MTV Networks, New York. "They said we needed to reach 30% or 35% penetration. We reached it and they said 'get to 40%.' But now that we've reached 50%, it's starting to happen.

"I met with people at Leo Burnett and DDB Needham Worldwide in Chicago, and we were saying someday we'll look back and point to the end of 1987. We're becoming a factor in the marketplace. Erosion of the broadcast network audience is happening. It's not just a blip. And advertisers are looking to cable to fill the gap."

Cable penetration passed the watershed 50% threshold in November, and as of Feb. 1, according to A.C. Nielsen Co., cable reached 51.1% penetration—or 45.5 U.S. million homes.

CBS thrown for loss

ESPN's offer to double his salary to $400,000 made Joe Theismann the first network football announcer to leave for cable.

"Cable is now delivering on its promise," says David Verklin, VP-media director, Hal Riney & Partners, San Francisco. "ESPN is no longer tractor pulls. CNN fills a bona fide niche. I've put clients on USA for the U.S. Open in tennis. And it's a lot easier to sell clients on cable today because a lot of them have it at home."

A number of forces seem to have emerged at the same time to create cable's new-found muscle. The Big Three network inventory had been reduced by the elections, the Olympics and make-goods to advertisers resulting from audience shortfalls in people-meter measurement of actual viewers vs. guarantees by networks. Besides crossing the 50% penetration level, ratings in every daypart on cable networks have shown significant improvements over the previous year.

Basic cable viewing in the fourth quarter of 1987 versus 1986, for example, increased by 14% for a 24-hour period while total television viewing was down 3%.

Many people turned to CNN to watch its extensive coverage of Col. Oliver North and the Iran-contra hearings. Others were impressed by ESPN's production of the America's Cup race off Perth, Australia. FNN was lauded for its calm and thorough coverage of the October stock market plunge. And ESPN's National Football League Games shattered cable ratings records.

Even presidential candidates are buying time on cable networks, a significant sign the industry has come of age as an ad medium. In Iowa, Rev. Jesse Jackson devoted nearly half of his TV budget to cable. And Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis even created an ad hoc network of cable systems to conduct a telethon.

Many observers believe the national cable networks could command as much as 10% of political ad spending this year while cable operators are likely to find local candidates ready buyers for time on local systems.

"The question for clients is no longer whether or not to use cable; rather the issue is how much more cable is appropriate," Saatchi & Saatchi's media bulletin concluded.

Beefing up product

But, according to USA Network President-CEO Kay Koplovitz, agencies and advertisers wouldn't be as interested if cable hadn't improved its product. "The programming is light years from what it was," she says.

Indeed. Gone are the days when USA depended on such chestnuts as ancient episodes of "Dragnet" to attract viewers and ESPN was described as "24 hours a day of underwater Australian wrist wrestling."

Today, USA, Lifetime and CBN Cable are able to pay up to $350,000 per episode for top off-network series including "Murder, She Wrote," "Miami Vice," "Cagney & Lacey," "Remington Steele," "Hardcastle & McCormick," "Father Murphy" and "Falcon Crest" before the shows go into broadcast syndication.

"You purchase high-profile, off-network shows as a promotional vehicle," says Tim Kassick, director of programming at CBN Cable Network, Virginia Beach, Va. "When you factor in the promotional potential from fresh off-network shows, it's worth it. It's better than buying 7,000 newspapers and a lot easier to coordinate. We have 8,000 cable operator affiliates. And problems are compounded in each market. NBC is on only one channel; CBN could be on 12 different channels in the same city."

CBN, Lifetime and USA, along with The Discovery Channel, ESPN, FNN, MTV, TNN, Nickelodeon and SuperStation TBS, also have increased production of original made-for-cable fare to add to their schedules. Among the entries are "Attitudes," a talk show on Lifetime; "The Campbells," a dramatic series on CBN; and "Airwolf," an action-adventure series on USA.

The cable networks, most of which are in the black today and can afford to experiment with programming, say it is simply a maturation of the industry.

A modest start

Essentially cable has come a long way from its modest beginnings as a tool for better reception. Originally known as "community antenna television" or CATV, the industry numbered just 70 operating systems serving 14,000 subscribers in 1952. By 1960, 640 systems served 650,000 subscribers and by 1970, 2,490 systems had 4.5 million subscribers.

But that was before people like Ted Turner recognized the potential benefits of cable TV—increased channel capacity, more extensive programming and the possibility of pay TV.

While revenues for the Big Three networks grew 17% a year and captured 90% of the country's television audience from 1975 to 1980, superstations, cable networks and pay service channels began their development. Between 1980 and 1984, revenues of cable and pay-TV companies catapulted by 278%.

> "We're becoming a factor. Erosion of the broadcast network audience is happening. And advertisers are looking to cable to fill the gap."
> Douglas Greenlaw
> MTV Networks

The media quickly heralded cable as "the medium of the future." But by the end of 1984, TV's "second coming" was laced with problems relating to franchise wars, stumbling networks, high capital costs and declining profits. Many wrote off the industry, trumpeting in its place another TV technological wonder, the videocassette recorder.

"But no one told the consumer cable was dead," says Robert Alter, president of the Cabletelevision Advertising Bureau, New York.

"The early expectations of cable were unrealistic. There was a backlash. Ad agencies were mad we didn't live up to it, but now we're on realistic footing."

"Things were flat for a while," agrees Roger Werner, senior VP-ad sales, ESPN, Bristol, Conn. "In 1985 and 1986, the industry went through a consolidation period while it grew in subscribers and advertisers and programming. But then the network erosion had temporarily slowed down and people thought it was the end of cable."

Enter the skipper

That's when Dennis Conner sailed to the rescue. ESPN's extensive live coverage of the America's Cup races from Perth, Australia, earned as high as a 20 share despite most of the racing footage reaching the East Coast after midnight.

"What it really did was prove we could do a complex production and provide intelligent commentary. We told the story," says ESPN's president-ceo, J. William Grimes. "Because of it the NFL had the confidence we could do the job for them, too."

Many in the industry credit the National Football League with bringing cable TV to a new level. "The NFL legitimized local advertising on cable," says John Malone, chairman-ceo of Tele-Communications Inc., Denver, by far the country's largest multiple system operator (see chart on Page S-2). "That just whets the appetite of the industry. I'm not a programmer, but I know programming will drive the economic machine.

"A lot of things the American public wants to see can't be paid for by advertising. That will increasingly be true in the future," he says. "We'll get into a hybrid model where subscription fees and advertising are the rule of thumb for paying for high-cost programming alternatives. We're just seeing the tip of that iceberg today."

Yet the Big Three networks are already feeling some of the effects of viewer fragmentation caused by the proliferation of cable TV and the expansion of independent broadcast stations. For instance, NBC's total audience as the top-rated network in 1986 was 5% less than 1980, when NBC ranked last.

With increased revenues, greater penetration and wider acceptance among advertisers, those in the industry believe cable will grow stronger, create a new cable window for off-network series, win rights to major events and begin producing its own top quality programming.

That's the idea behind Ted Turner's new Turner Network Television, an ad-supported basic channel he hopes to launch in October. TNT, he says, will be cable's vehicle for exclusive programming including series, miniseries, TV movies, special events, sports and jewels from his MGM film library, including "Gone With The Wind" (see story on Page S-22).

Other networks already have expanded original production and have started to spawn a new cottage industry as a program supplier to broadcast stations. Nickelodeon's "Double Dare," for example, has become a hit in broadcast syndication and another version of the children's game show called "Family Double Dare" has joined Fox Broadcasting Co.'s Saturday night prime-time lineup.

The Disney Channel's original episodes of "Winnie the Pooh" may eventually find a spot on ABC. Showtime's "It's Garry Shandling's Show" started airing on Fox's fledgling fourth network in March. And NBC plans to develop a family situation comedy for The Disney Channel that may eventually join the NBC weekend or daytime lineup.

NBC Entertainment President Brandon Tartikoff believes the less competitive and less risky cable arena could allow new writing and producing talent to develop without the pressure of ratings.

Sports salvation

But while the cable networks continue efforts to produce original dramas, situation comedies and special events, the most coveted programming on cable channels is sports. And for good reason.

The three-hour NBA All-Star Saturday on SuperStation TBS in February reached 3.3 million homes, the channel's second largest audience ever, behind the National Geographic Society "Explore" special, "Secrets of the Titanic," which ran last fall.

An event halfway around the world, the America's Cup covered by ESPN, excited the U.S. about cable.

ESPN's eight regular-season National Football League games averaged a combined cable/broadcast rating of 12.4, well above the 9.5 the network guaranteed to advertisers. ESPN's four preseason games also topped their guarantee of 6.0 with an average 8.5 cable rating.

Pay-per-view and pay cable also have become the premiere venues for boxing, turning the once-moribund sport into a profitable venture even though they pay double and triple what a broadcast network is willing to pay.

Media Sports Business, a Paul Kagan Associates publication, estimates ad sales on cable sports programming both national and regional could reach more than $248 million in 1988, accounting for some 17% of cable's total national and local ad revenues.

ESPN's ad sales were up 20% in 1987 and the network hopes the expansion of Arena Football, another America's Cup regatta and the second year of its three-year $153 million deal with the NFL will yield similar results. Big on ESPN's shopping list is Major League Baseball and a hoped-for co-production of the 1992 Olympics. Competition, however, will be fierce.

Because of what has become prohibitive cost for Olympic rights, all three networks and possibly Fox Broadcasting Co. could be in search of a cable partner, with both USA Network and Lifetime likely candidates. USA is also "very interested" in Major League baseball.

Dual revenue

If a cable network were to land baseball or part of the Olympics, the service likely would turn to cable operators to help pay for the rights. It is this dual revenue stream from

Marketers take notice of viewers' Discovery

By Wayne Walley

Channel moves curiosity, nature, science into an 18-hour-a-day lab for fresh programing

The Discovery Channel has become cable TV's latest success story.

Launched on June 17, 1985, with just 300,000 subscribers, the network now reaches 29.4 million households with its mix of nature, science and technology, history, human adventure and world exploration documentaries.

"National Geographic couldn't get arrested trying to sell this stuff," says Bart McHugh, senior VP-director of national radio/TV programming, DDB Needham Worldwide, New York. "But without sports, without weather and without news, The Discovery Channel is making a go of it."

Discovery programs 18 hours each day, scouring the globe for material. Essentially the network has become a godsend for documentary producers by creating a new American outlet for their work besides the limited time devoted to documentaries on the Public Broadcasting Service and "National Geographic" specials.

"We're a breath of fresh air for the producers," says Ruth Otte, president-chief operating officer of The Discovery Channel, based in Landover, Md.

"We want to be the home of premiere programs in this genre. But we also need advertisers. That's the economics of it. We need ad revenues and affiliate revenues . . . Getting the programs is what it is ultimately about and we're two years ahead of schedule."

Originally supported by subscriber fees only, Discovery opened a New York sales office last April and now lists such heavyweight advertisers as AT&T, Burger King, Colgate-Palmolive, Ford Motor Co., General Motors, Gillette, MasterCard, Procter & Gamble, Timex, Wang and Whirlpool, among others. "We always thought we'd bring a new viewer to the advertiser," Ms. Otte says. "Half our audience, according to a study we did in February, is light TV viewers, people an advertiser isn't likely to reach with traditional fare.

The first Discover Channel production, made with BBC's Natural History unit, is "Reef Watch: Live From The Red Sea."

"The documentaries are also squeaky-clean programming. We can go after corporate affairs money or budgets for classics in much the same way MTV likes to tap into a sponsor's promotional budget instead of advertising."

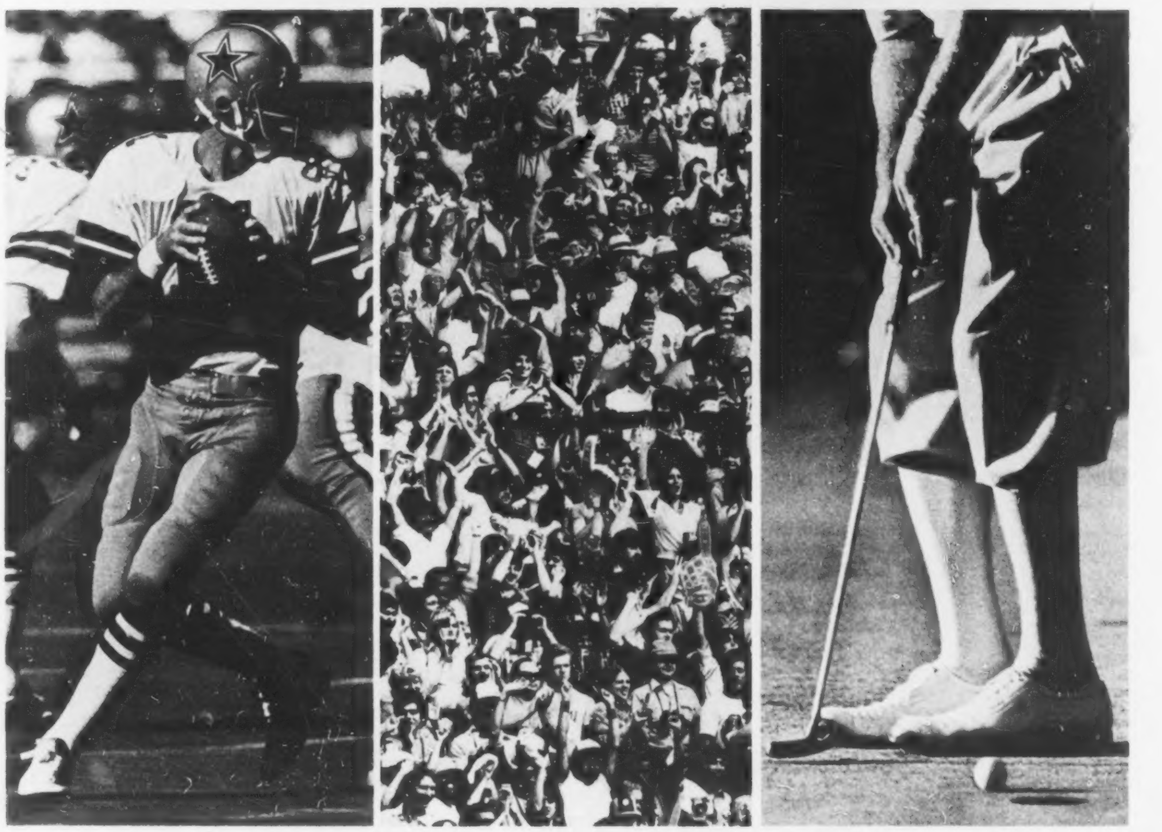
ad sales and subscribers' fees that just might give cable the advantage over broadcasters.

But because so many cable companies have merged and invested in each other, the industry has raised the ire of broadcasters and set off new hearings in Washington.

Many, including Jack Valenti, president of the Motion Picture Association of America, question whether the industry has grown monopolistic and too large and powerful to warrant a compulsory license. They are urging new additional government regulations, but Ted Turner believes the industry will fare well.

"You had to expect a counterattack," Mr. Turner says. "We'll have to work hard and defend ourselves. We've moved from the position over the past 10 years from way on the outside into the predominant communications media as far as 50% of the people are concerned.

"We're doing our job making programs and we have a service people want and enjoy. But we're stepping on the toes of our competitors, and we should be concerned."



THE MEN YOU WANT ARE WATCHING DALLAS, CHEERS AND DIFFERENT STROKES.

The upscale men you're after stand way apart from the norm. And so do their viewing habits. To this select group, "Night Court" means a college basketball game in prime time. And "L.A. Law" is the Raiders' defensive unit. No wonder these men who earn more, spend more and do more are turning off the broadcast networks and turning to ESPN®

They know ESPN is where they can find CFA College Football, Top Rank Boxing, NHL Hockey, College Basketball and more. This season we've even got TV's ultimate weekly drama series: NFL Sunday Night Football.™

And smart advertisers know ESPN is where they can find men who buy 22% more life insurance, 31% more telecommunications equipment and who take 33% more business trips than the national norm.* Which proves just how above average our average viewer is.

Without ESPN, you're underdelivering this very attractive audience. But you can reach them effectively—for a much lower CPM than the networks—by placing a mere 10% of your sports budget with us. You'll see results so dramatic they could change the way you spend your ad dollars from now on. After all, if you're still trying to reach upscale men through the likes of "Knots Landing," you just might be missing the boat.

Koplovitz sets sights on banner year

Changes at networks widen the opening for USA alternatives

Building on the premise in 1980 that a broad-based entertainment network would develop core viewership attractive to many advertisers, Kay Koplovitz now presides over a USA Network that has become a model for the cable industry. In establishing USA as a pacesetter, the network's president-ceo has become the most visible woman manager in the cable industry.

Born in Milwaukee, she has a bachelor's degree from the University of Wisconsin and a master's degree in communications from Michigan State University. Before joining USA Network, she was VP and executive director of UA-Columbia Satellite Services.

Ms. Koplovitz currently sits on the board of the New York City Partnership, Junior Achievement, Ad Council, International Council and the National Academy of Cable Programmers. She recently talked with ADVERTISING AGE about cable TV's present and future.

Q: Some call the fourth quarter of 1987 the turning point for cable TV. Ad revenues soared and now many paint a rosy future for the industry. Was the fourth quarter also a turning point for USA Network?

A: It's hard to pinpoint one moment as a "turning point" for the industry. I look to 1986 and think there were significant changes then in terms of the amount of advertising clients who looked for cable. Clearly there were changes at the three networks and a decrease in audience. But then, we've seen more changes with People Meters and there was a stronger impact in the second half of 1987. The year 1987, in general, was much stronger for cable in terms of ad sales. Then it picked up tremendous steam in the fourth quarter and the momentum is carrying over into 1988. We've had exceedingly strong sales in the first quarter and it looks good. This year, 1988, is likely to be cable's banner year.

Q: The networks are experiencing a glut of ad inventory in the second quarter for various reasons. Some people are saying now is the time to find bargains on the networks, particularly in daytime, because so few are buying time. But it sounds like USA and cable TV aren't experiencing the same thing. Does this mean cable is at the point where it is no longer severely impacted by what happens in the network marketplace?

A: In a sense, broadcast and cable are all TV and they are impacted by the marketplace. But advertisers in broader advertisers because it limits national ad time to 7½ minutes per hour, less than other cable and broadcast networks.

"The commercial breaks also float," Ms. Otte says. "We try to break once in the first half-hour, once at the half-hour and once in the second half-hour, but it's not always at the same exact time. We break at times when it fits in with the documentary. And if a show doesn't lend itself to breaks, then we won't break. So far the policy has worked okay."

A Discovery spokesman says the channel has recorded its first "break even" month and plans to reinvest earnings in its own productions.

The first will be "Reef Watch: Live From The Red Sea," a coventure with the BBC's Natural History unit. Scheduled to air at different times on May 6, 7 and 8, the show will give viewers a first-hand look at the Red Sea's underwater flora and fauna. The pictures will be beamed directly from the sea floor to a satellite and relayed live to The Discovery Channel.

"Cable, in general, has an image of being all reruns," Ms. Otte says. "But when you are in a niche, you innovate. We have a responsibility. We can't take the audience lightly. We need to get their attention, so we plan to get heavily into coproductions in the future. We now have a development department and we plan to find partners from around the world."

numbers are realizing that a cable network with a national measurable audience can no longer be swept under the carpet. You can't say the network audience erosion is an aberration anymore. Advertisers are finding a fragmented marketplace and they can't make it up just by buying syndication. The networks lose audience share and cable restores it. I expect cable will become part of more regular buys by advertisers. We are now with a number of companies. But cable ad revenues are still not where the marketplace delivery is. We have room to grow. We are not getting full value.

Q: Cable's growth curve slowed in the mid-1980s and people were writing off the medium because it hadn't lived up to its potential. Subscriber levels, revenues and ratings were not near the early projections. Now it seems cable has quietly and suddenly achieved what it said it would do. What happened to cause this?

A: The programming improved. Major city cable systems were built. The distribution system is now there. But the programming is light years from what it was. It's hard to predict how much better it will get in the next five or ten years, but it's growing fast.

Q: Did USA Network change its strategies?

A: No. It's been clear to us. And for the last couple of years we've been doing exactly what we've been saying we will do. We are a broad-based entertainment network. Our strategy in prime time and access is to combine off-network product in an exclusive window with our original productions.

Q: In your opinion, what does cable offer a new advertiser and once you have them, can you keep them as advertisers?

A: We can keep them. That's been the track record of the network. Cable offers an advertiser an exceedingly good quality audience the advertiser is trying to reach. Again, this is a generalization, but cable usually delivers more viewers per viewing household than broadcast in whatever target audience an advertiser wants.

Q: Do you foresee increased competition between cable networks for programming such as sports and off-network series? There's also the advent of Turner Network Television. Will this help or hurt cable?

A: There's already a lot of competition for programming. Will one or two more channels make a difference? Maybe not. There is a definite difference in the type of show a USA Network or CBN Network or Lifetime Cabletelevision Network will go after. Sporting events is where there might be increased competition. We're very interested in Major League Baseball and the National Basketball Association.

Q: When you talk about sports, ESPN's NFL games come to mind. ESPN passed on the cost of the programming to cable operators with a subscriber fee surcharge. Might USA do the same in the future?

> "Sporting events is where there might be increased competition. We're very interested in baseball and the National Basketball Association."

A: Cable operators are important for sharing program costs. We all benefit, but they benefit by it the most. These days each subscriber is worth about $2,000 to a cable operator.

Q: They also get local avails to sell in the high-profile programming, which brings new local advertisers to cable and increases the operator's revenues.

A: Yes. Local advertising is becoming an important source of revenue for cable operators. That's one thing that will continue to grow and become more and more important throughout the 1990s.

No longer endless pages of gray listings, cable guides such as TV Host, CablePlus, Choice and The Cable Guide are positioning themselves to become "one-stop watching guides" in the future.

Users opening up to spruced-up guides

■ Cover stories, easier-to-read listings win over advertisers, systems and subscribers

By Eileen Norris

It wasn't so long ago that cable guides' endless sea of listings would test the bleary vision of even a world-class couch potato.

Today, the guides to cable programming are better looking, beginning with splashy cover stories, opening to neatly presented program highlights, and finishing with easier-to-read listings. The guides are finally starting to get respect from advertisers, cable systems and even subscribers—some of whom appear to willing to spend up to $3 a month for a guide.

Some guides even place a new emphasis on network programming information. "The networks won't go away," says one cable guide publisher matter of factly. "We can co-exist." The goal is for the cable guide to become the "one-stop watching guide" of the future.

"The potential for the national advertiser is enormous, says Lou Pirnik Jr., national advertising director for TV Host Inc., Harrisburg, Pa., which publishes cable guides distributed in Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Oregon.

"Network TV viewing is down, non-commercial TV watching is up and these viewers have to pick up a guide to find out what to watch," he says. "It's a great place for an advertiser's message." It's especially true now that cable has reached that all-important 50% household penetration benchmark.

From a circulation perspective, the deregulation of the cable industry has given the cable guide market a boost, says Bob Dallas, vp-marketing for TVSM Inc.'s The Cable Guide, Horsham, Pa.

"The cable operators can now charge more for their services, so they have more money to pay for the guides," he says. "Plus it allows the operators to provide better service to subscribers."

Cable operators seem more receptive to the guides, too, but their enthusiasm could have something to do with the fact that some subscribers are beginning to pay for the listings, which translates into a new revenue source for the operator as well as a handy billboard for a cable system's promotions.

"The guide adds value to the cable package," says Larry Higby, senior vp of marketing, programming and sales at Irvine, Calif.-based Times Mirror Cable Television, which has 50 cable systems and 915,000 subscribers in the U.S. The cable company in January started offering The Cable Guide at no cost to its premium service subscribers. It sells the guide, which it buys from TVSM, for $1 an issue to basic subscribers who request it.

Still, many advertisers apparently remain lukewarm to the idea of cable guides. "It's easier to get an appointment on Madison Avenue," says Mr. Pirnik. "We don't get as many doors slammed in our face anymore, but it's still a hard sell."

"We've always been a service guide and we'll continue to be that, but we plan to be read as an entertainment vehicle in the future."

"It's easier to get an appointment on Madison Avenue. We don't get as many doors slammed in our face anymore, but it's still a hard sell."

Lou Pirnik Jr.

When Time Inc. lost $47 million after the quick death of its TV-Cable Week in September, 1983, uncertainty swept the fledgling guide industry. As other cable guides succumbed, no one was sure what was going to become of the infant category.

Now that uneasiness seems to have subsided a bit.

"Our research shows that subscribers want one source for viewing information and editorial entertainment," says Alan Vandenburgh, president of The CPI Guide Network in Boston, which publishes about 200 different versions of its guide, going to 5.5 million subscribers monthly under the names Cable Choice, Cable Time and Choice.

And he doesn't believe the grand-daddy of them all, TV Guide can give cable viewers what they need. "The weekly TV Guide is in a league of its own, but they can't give the detailed cable information that we can," he says. "Plus, cable programming is viewed on a monthly basis, so our chief competitors are the other guides." (See related story on Page S-26.)

CPI uses its cable operators as its distributors for the magazine, which costs subscribers anywhere from 75¢ to $2. The publisher started charging for the magazine about a year ago, but only about 10% have been converted to paid status. Mr. Vandenburgh is aiming to increase that percentage to 60%, although he realizes the process will take time.

"We have found that the people who really use the guide are prepared to pay for it," he says. "When you give a guide away, about 20% to 30% of the people throw it away. If we can get 60% paid and figure in those that throw it away anyway, then there's only a 10% gap."

The Cable Guide has a rate base of 6 million nationally and also charges its 20 multiple system operators for the guide. The operators can either sell it (which about one-third do, for anywhere from 75¢ to $1.50) or include the guide in its package to subscribers who buy two or more pay services.

(The cable publishers declined to say what they charge the operators for the guides. Nor would cable operators divulge what they pay for the guides or how much revenue they get from selling the guides to subscribers.)

"The cost we charge the cable operator depends on distribution, locale and volume," says Neil Heller, president of The Cable Guide,, which is published in 500 versions. (The 50,000 pages of different listings are printed in a 10-day production period.) The average length of the monthly guide is 248 pages, which includes 200 pages of listings.

The Cable Guide had a heady 1987, gaining 2 million subscribers over the previous year. Advertising revenue shot up 68.4% in 1987, from $11.5 million in 1986 to $19.4 million in 1987. Advertising pages for all of '87 climbed 55.4% over the previous year. And the publisher reports the first two months of 1988 brought continued growth, with ad pages up 18.6% over the same period in '87 and ad revenue up 51.7%.

New sign-ons in the first four months include major advertisers such as Prudential, Panasonic, Seagram, Chevrolet, Ford and Chrysler, according to Mr. Heller.

Female audience lifeblood of Lifetime

Tom Burchill has good reason to smile.

Lifetime Cabletelevision Network, of which he is president-ceo, projects a 40% increase in ad revenues in 1988 following record revenues in 1987.

The channel turned its first profit more than a year ago and has now solidified its position as the top cable network for reaching a female audience. "We view it as the right niche and the right segment to reach," Mr. Burchill says. "Magazines and radio went from mass-market vehicles to segmentation. TV is going through the same transformation. We're at an age when cable is moving toward personalization.

"The bulk of what we do is demographically pure. We want to reach upscale working women without diluting the audience. To me, the attractiveness we've provided advertisers in the advent of people meters is a predictable demographic profile. It's a safety net to advertisers."

While some advertisers such as includin Johnson & Johnson continue to use cable as a small supplemental buy, others—among them—Gillette Co., Lever Bros. Co., Procter & Gamble Co. and Weight Watchers International—have been on Lifetime since the merger of Daytime and Cable Health Network formed the channel in 1984.

Soon after the merger, Lifetime dropped much of Cable Health Network's family fitness, science and medicine programming in favor of Daytime's bent to provide alternative programming for women.

Turner explodes barrier via TNT

By Wayne Walley

Ted Turner likes to swim upstream.

At a time when this flamboyant entrepreneur has been rocked by financial turmoil and forced to sell off part of his company, he's attempting lately to expand his empire.

His latest venture: Turner Network Television, a new 24-hour, ad-supported "super" basic cable channel set to launch Oct. 3 with the exclusive cable TV premiere of "Gone With The Wind."

"Ted Turner had to do it," says Bart McHugh, senior VP-director of national radio/TV programming, DDB Needham Worldwide, New York. "There are storm clouds over the future of superstations. He needs a unique network. The cable industry has money to buy programming, but the question comes down to where do they put it? Cable operators virtually own TNT, so this could be the place."

As a home for cable-exclusive programming and high-profile events, some industry observers believe TNT could be the drawing card to bring more subscribers to cable TV and push the penetration level, now at about 51%, to 60% or even 70%.

To make it, all work, however, the new channel needs subscribers. Prime Cable's Atlanta system, with 150,000 subscribers, became TNT's first affiliate in March. Other MSOs also signing last month include Jones Intercable, Galaxy Cablevision and Cardinal Communications, which combined add another million subscribers to the TNT base. but Mr. Turner is hoping for 30 million by the October launch.

"If we've got 30 million subscribers, we can move the official NBA package

WTBS went for nostalgia in airing the "New Leave It to Beaver" series.

A little promotion, marketing and upgrading of the editorial matter is making a bevy of cable guides increasingly attractive to advertisers, systems and subscribers

ering right now, so plans call for ad rates to increase by about 15% in June (a color page ad currently costs $53,400 and a b&w page is $41,120).

The guide also is sprucing up its image, having just unveiled a new design format in its March issue. Plans also call for more entertainment features, and a new editor, former US magazine Managing Editor Jay Gissen, assumed his duties last month.

"As the advertising increases," says Mr. Heller, "the magazine will get even more attractive. We've always been a service guide and we'll continue to be that, but we plan to be read as an entertainment vehicle in the future," he adds.

CPI started out with a circulation of 25,000 in Waltham, Mass., just six years ago. Plans call for opening this month of a 10-person advertising sales office in New York. And Mr. Vandenburgh says he hopes to add Chicago and Los Angeles offices by the end of the year.

"Cable is becoming an accepted medium," he adds. "And even though our national advertising revenue isn't there yet, we had $2 million in ad sales last year and we expect to at least double that this year." Target categories include cigarettes, package goods, automotive and home electronics.

The trend toward paid guides is one that will continue, says Mr. Pirnik of TV Host Inc., whose guides have a combined circulation of 2 million and are distributed by 30 cable operators. "The cable operator needs revenue streams and the sale of the guide is lucrative," he maintains.

But not everyone thinks that's necessarily true. "It's not a significant source of revenue for us," says Jeffrey Wayne, executive director of marketing and advertising sales for Colony Communications, a cable company in Providence, R.I. Subscribers pay anywhere from $1.50 to $3 to receive The Cable Guide.

But he agrees the monthly guide can give a cable company a leg up on its own marketing efforts. Cable operators typically are given several pages within the monthly guide, with such uses as advertising contests or just providing information about how subscribers can read their monthly cable bill.

"It's a tremendous service," says Mr. Pirnik. TV Host is sold to subscribers (and on newsstands) for anywhere from 50¢ to $2 a month. "The magazine is distributed through the cable system so how it works is up to them," he says, adding that some package it into the service at no charge while others sell it separately.

But not all cable operators think cable guides are as necessary as they were a couple of years ago, before newspapers added cable listings.

"I have mixed emotions about cable guides," Mr. Wayne says. "Newspapers are doing an excellent job of putting together a prime-time grid showing exactly what's on cable . . . The absolute necessity of having a guide is not what it was a few years ago. But, the guides focus specifically on cable programming and show viewers what channels the shows are on so they're important for retention and for giving us a place to market new products."

The Chicago Sun-Times has been offering cable listings for about four years, but not because it felt it had to compete with the cable guides, says Jim Wagner, "TV Prevue" editor. "They can't compete with the dailies," he says.

"First of all, the public perception is that we offer cable listings as a true public service. It has nothing to do with competition. And secondly, we provide daily listings in the paper and weekly listings in our TV guide, so our information is more current than a monthly publication," he says.

The Sun-Times TV supplement has grown from 50 pages, before it added cable listings, to about 100 pages a week, he adds. "Our readership is responsive to cable. We believe about 33% have cable, so we're responding to their needs."

The Los Angeles Times has offered cable listings since 1980, says TV editor Aleene MacMinn, and since that time has added eight pages to its Sunday "Television Times" to accommodate the cable services. "And I could easily use four more pages," Ms. MacMinn says.

"I'd like to think people look for the cable listings in their daily newspaper so that they don't have to go to two sources. Hopefully, they read the paper and stick with us for the TV listings," she adds.

over to TNT. That's part of contract with the NBA," Mr. Turner told the Southern California Cable Association in March. "That will also allow us to put 25 Atlanta Hawks games back on Superstation TBS, and it means the cable industry will be able to offer 75 NBA games."

But the goal of lining up 30 million subscribers—about two-thirds of all current cable subscribers—for a new cable channel in six months could be far-fetched.

Turner executives project 10 million to 15 million subscribers by October, which would be the largest subscriber launch of a cable network ever and immediately qualify TNT for tracking by A.C. Nielsen Co.

Immediate national ratings may help persuade some advertisers to come on board, but most media buyers remain skeptical.

"Ted is brilliant. He's often ahead of himself and the industry, but on this one he'll have to prove a lot of things," says Chuck Bachrach, senior VP-media, Western International Media, Los Angeles.

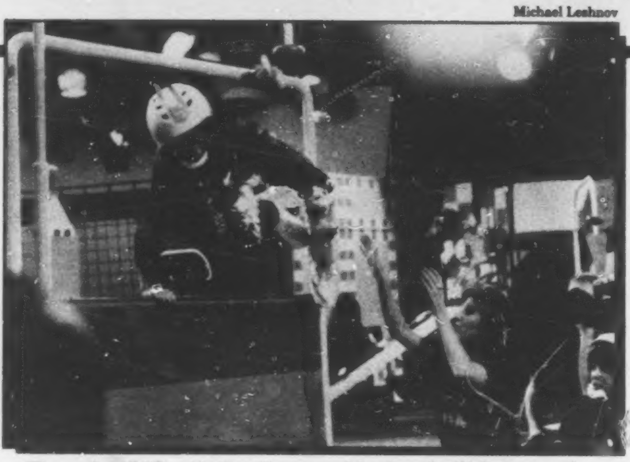
"The problem is Turner could price TNT out of the marketplace because they need the money. Already TBS seems to be priced more on the company's financial needs than media needs. USA Network, Lifetime Cable Network, The Nashville Network and CBN Cable Network are all pricing time more efficiently right now," Mr. Bachrach says.

The price of time won't matter, should TNT gain rights to top events like the Grammy Awards, the Olympic Games, Major League Baseball or "anything else we can think of," targets Mr. Turner painted last October. But now the chairman of Atlanta-based Turner Broadcasting System has lowered his sights.

"I was warned by my board—don't get people's expectations too high. Let Rupert Murdoch do that," Mr. Turner says. "But those of you that know me know I've really wanted to do some high-profile original programming for cable. If we start with 30 million subscribers, we could move our programming budgets up a year. The budget now is $40 million for original productions in 1989; $90 million in 1990 and $150 million in 1991."

TNT, he said, will start with one high-profile program a month in addition to sports programming and premieres of classic films from the MGM library, both colorized and originals.

Michael Leshnov



The antics of "Double Dare" are resulting in spinoffs for networks.

The channel will kick off Oct. 3 with the first half of "Gone With The Wind." The second half will follow on Oct. 4 with a two-hour documentary, "The Making of Gone With the Wind," scheduled for Oct. 5.

MTM's first major made-for-cable production will be a 10-hour miniseries titled "The History of Hollywood." The project is the culmination of a two-year project with the British Broadcasting Co.

"The one thing that's helped us sell this to the cable operators we've talked to and to our board was most cable networks spend about 50% of their income on programming. But for the first three years, TNT will be spending more than 80% of its total revenues—advertising plus subscriber fees—on programming. We can do it because we don't have to create another overhead," Mr. Turner says.

Turner executives expect TNT could have a prime-time schedule dominated by original programming within five years.

The cable guides don't think the dailies can do what they perceive as a job cut out for them. "The papers are not complete," says Mr. Vandenburgh of CPI. "People buy a newspaper for one reason but it has nothing to do with TV listings."

That sentiment is shared by The Cable Guide's Mr. Heller "Newspapers or supplements have no major negative effect on us, because our guides are system specific. The Sunday newspaper includes the services a cable subscriber has and those services he doesn't have. Our guide is more comprehensive and detailed. We have 20 different versions of our guide in Chicago alone to match the different systems."

Cable guides, says Cabletelevision Advertising Bureau President Bob Alter, are well positioned for success in the years to come. "They have gone from being a technical service to one that is programming driven. In the future, cable operators will be more aggressive in audience promotions, which will help position them well for future."

■ ESPN's deal with the NFL was not only the most important programming milestone in cable TV history, it was a brilliant strategic move. In one fell stroke, Capital Cities (80% owner of ESPN) made ABC's NFL package profitable; it elevated ESPN's prestige; it lessoned the glut of NFL on network TV, which was killing the sport; and it opened the door for dozens of other major ventures to come to cable.

■ Garry put Showtime on the map. He appeared when the struggling network desperately needed visibility and desperately needed something to differentiate it from HBO. "Shandling" now runs on both Showtime and Fox. There's a question about whether this move to Fox will ultimately dilute the show's drawing power on Showtime. It probably will. Ironically, cable executives have been pleading for original and unusual first-run shows. Then they get one and promptly sell it to one of the networks.

Miami Vice $250,000
USA Network

■ The "Vice" is coming to cable! Big deal. Cable TV has a disconcerting habit of picking up off-network shows that are dying fast deaths. Once-potent "Vice," produced by MCA, is a sorry has-been and due for cancellation. MCA (which owns half of USA) could literally not give this show away in the syndication after-market. How convenient to sell "Vice" to its own division. USA has trumpeted this as a great coup. It's really just another uninteresting program acquisition.

Murder She Wrote
$350,000
USA Network

■ With "Murder," we have yet another example of an off-network hour that could probably not cut it in the much more lucrative world of syndication. The difference between "Vice" and "Murder," however, is that "Murder" is still genuinely popular on network TV. "Vice" is genuinely not. MCA (which not uncoincidentally owns half of USA and all of "Murder") is probably smart to let "Murder" run on USA before moving it into syndication. After all, the syndication market just might be warm up to hour shows one of these days.

King of the mountain keeps up with devotees

By Eileen Norris

If the plethora of cable guides making the rounds these days seems to resemble the 35-year-old TV Guide, it doesn't appear to rankle William Deitch, the weekly magazine's general manager. In fact, he's rather amused by it all.

"You know what they say . . . imitation is the sincerest form of flattery. Of course, we don't want anyone using our logos or any of our property, but if our successful formula causes emulation, it tells you something about what we really are," he says.

Just as the cable guides seem to think looking like the TV Guide might bring them more readers and advertisers, so has the Triangle Publications magazine warmed to cable.

In a limited sense, TV Guide has been carrying cable listings since its debut in 1953. But that was only because parts of rural America couldn't receive TV signals without the help of underground cable. It wasn't until 1978 that TV Guide added cable listings, beginning with HBO.

But a lot has happened in a few years. In 1980, cable listings accounted for 16% of the Radnor, Pa.-based magazine with a whopping 17.6 million circulation. Today, 53% of the publication's listings are devoted to cable.

Cable has created complications, says Roger Youman, coeditor. "There are more choices, and it's hard to figure out what to watch and when. As cable has grown, so have we. We want to provide our readers with information that is important to them."

■ 'TV Guide' now devotes 53% of its listings to cable and vows to keep up with its audience

Obviously, if viewers are paying more attention to cable, he says, TV Guide will keep increasing its cable features and listings. "We're governed by the magazine we are, and people buy us to get information about TV," he adds.

TV Guide was partly prompted to take more interest in cable television, says Mr. Deitch, by the 1983 introduction of Time Inc.'s TV-Cable Week. "Anytime a publication gets introduced, you take it seriously," he says.

"It was time for us to make additional commitments to cable and apparently the readers agreed. We're more successful and they're (TV-Cable Week gone." The magazine crashed after only a few months.

Keeping up with cable and its growing number of services has proven to be more complicated for TV Guide. It currently publishes 106 editions, each of which carries about 117 pages of listings and editorial, not including the national features section that wraps around the listings.

The cable listings have increased the production workload; there are 15,000 to 17,000 different pages of programming printed every week. The magazine, which has a Saturday issue date, is available on newsstands the previous Monday or Tuesday, while home subscribers receive the magazine no later than Friday, the day before the week's listings start.

But TV Guide doesn't try to include all cable programming. "If it's a large enough market we'll program it, but no one in-

■ One dramatic indication of cable's growing popularity is its high-visibility programming. Here are some examples of the most watched—and most costly—shows on cable today, along with capsule comments from Verne Gay, ADVERTISING AGE'S senior editor covering the broadcasting industry. Program costs shown are AA estimates.

Remington Steele

CBN

■ "Steele" was one of the first network shows to make the big leap to cable. It kicked off CBN's fall schedule last September. Unfortunately "Steele" does little to differentiate CBN's schedule and helps to reinforce the notion that cable is the final resting place for net TV cast-offs. "Steele" was an amusing trifle during its network years; now it's just another hour to fill up CBN's prime-time schedule.

Cagney and Lacey

Lifetime

■ Once again, we have an example of a tired network TV show finding new life in cable. This example is a little different, however. Unlike "Vice," "C&L" has a truly loyal and long-standing core audience, which, no doubt, will follow the show to cable. "C&L" also will complement—as well as diversify—Lifetime's general adult women-oriented format. "C&L" came on board in February and will be "exclusive to cable" starting this September.

cludes everything," he says. "Some audiences are too small." Nor is TV Guide producing any system-specific editions for cable operators. The editions are based on TV signal areas that cover a particular market.

What TV Guide is doing for its cable customers, which Mr. Deitch puts at a "huge number," is offering the magazine at $2.40 a month (55¢ a copy) through cable systems that are willing to market the magazine as a separate line item on the subscriber's cable bill.

"The magazine is marketed through the cable system as part of the package offered to subscribers. The clear distinction (between TV Guide and other cable guides) is that these subs pay for our magazine and it meets [Audit Bureau of Circulations'] circulation and audit requirements," Mr. Deitch says.

While TV Guide doesn't have any special promotions for cable systems, it does actively work out agreements with new cable companies to market the magazine, says Mr. Deitch. "Cable is an important market for us; it's big business."

The essential difference, he says, between TV Guide and cable guides, is that "they're a marketing tool and we're a magazine that charges customers."

Mr. Deitch adds that he doesn't know of too many cable guides that have been successful in getting subscribers to pay for their monthly guide. "That will be the real test of how successful they [cable guides] will be.

"That explains why we do so well," he says. "We charge customers the full price and get good rates from advertisers. There are no free rides in this business."

Indeed, no one can deny TV Guide's success. The magazine pulled in $331.2 million in advertising revenue last year, a $13 million gain over the previous year.

The newsweeklies, Reader's Digest and women's service books are seen as chief competitors for ad dollars, and Mr. Deitch says the magazine's toughest test for readers is repeated every week. That's when 8 million copies of the 75¢ magazine are picked up on impulse by shoppers in supermarkets across the country. Subscribers pay 72¢ an issue. The magazine feels it can best reach consumers through TV advertising. A new ad campaign launched this year keys in on specific articles and features appearing in that week's issue.

Mr. Deitch says he doesn't feel threatened by the cable guides and maintains that TV Guide will do the best it can to protect its market share. "We cover TV and that means broadcast and cable and we are more accurate and timely anyone else."

But Mr. Youman says any publication that puts out information about TV is competition. "And there is a lot more competition today than there has been in the past," he adds. "We're working hard to maintain our position of preeminence in the field," he adds.

While TV Guide executives play down the importance of cable guides as a competitive factor in the future, they don't deny that TV Guide has trademarked the name "Cable TV Guide," which used to be a department in the magazine. "The name isn't in use now," says Mr. Youman, "but like any other company we want to protect our trademark."

Asked if he sees the day when TV Guide might change its name to include the word "cable," Mr. Youman responds, "It's not necessary to change our name. TV is TV and people sitting at home don't care if they get their signal through the air or on cable."

Mr. Deitch is even more adamant about keeping the magazine's identity intact: "Almost everyone in the country recognizes TV Guide . . . and there is no brand that has a higher recognition. This franchise has been built over many years and we wouldn't think of changing the name."

Lifeblood of Lifetime

Developing a niche as the top cable network to reach women, Lifetime watches ad revenues soar as it adds marketers like Chevrolet, Beech-Nut, Playtex and Nestle, while continuing to carry Sunday's health, science, medicine fare

"When we started this, most of the cable channels were centered on movies, sports and more male-appeal programming. There was a big gap," recalls Mr. Burchill, who took over the merged networks in 1984.

"At the same time on the advertising side, lifestyle changes resulted in the decline of daytime on broadcast networks. The irony was that it became tough to find women as an ad target at a time when they became a more attractive customer because they were working."

The channel, a joint venture of Capital Cities/ABC, Hearst Corp. and Viacom International, quickly developed much of its own original programming.

Those shows include "The Dr. Ruth Show," "Regis Philbin's Lifestyles," "Wok with Yan," "People in Crisis," "What Every Baby Knows" with Dr. T. Berry Brazelton, "Mother's Day" with Joan Lunden, "Motherworks" with Cyndy Garvey and "Attitudes," a women-oriented talk show hosted by Linda Dano and Nancy Glass.

Not completely abandoning its health, science and medicine roots, the network becomes Lifetime Medical Television on Sundays with such shows as "Doctors' Sunday" and "Doctors' Sunrise."

Today Lifetime is available on more than 3,500 cable systems across the country reaching more than 35 million households.

"If you want to reach women, Lifetime is one of the hottest things on TV," says David Verklin, VP-media director, Hal Riney & Partners, San Francisco.

"Our belief is the American consumer doesn't turn on the TV and say 'Let's watch cable TV,' " he adds. "They watch program or personalities. CNN has Larry King, who is terrific. But the two ladies on Lifetime's 'Attitudes' have started to emerge as two neat personalities on cable.

"At the same time, the networks, in daytime, show an audience composition of 80% female and some older males. This is fine, but the statistics also show 60% of the women 18-49 are now working. This means the network claim to women is really the stay-at-home mother.

"There's equal opportunity now for all," he says. "For reaching the right women, cable, particularly Lifetime, is fast becoming as attractive to buy as the three networks."

Mr. Burchill says cosmetics companies like Cosmair Inc., for its L'Oreal line, and Revlon Inc. have increased buys this year while car makers such as General Motors Corp.'s Chevrolet and Austin Rover Cars of North America's Sterling have become Lifetime clients for the first time.

Other new advertisers, according to Mr. Burchill, include Beech-Nut Nutrition Corp., International Playtex, Kitchenaid and Nestle Foods Corporation.

Last year Lifetime aggressively pursued off-network shows, landing short-lived female-appeal series "Jack & Mike," "Kay O'Brien," "Lady Blue" and "Partners In Crime."

"Falcon Crest" failed to live up to expectations on Lifetime, but Mr. Burchill has been pleased with the performance of "Cagney & Lacey;" Lifetime licensed 125 episodes for a presyndication window beginning Feb. 1.

"It's a little easier to determine what to go for in terms of acquired programming," he says. "There's research that shows which are the most appealing and upscale. We also punctuate the regularly scheduled shows with specials or events. A special this fall will be about the impact of AIDS on women."

But Lifetime's future likely lies within its expanded original production efforts. Construction of the channel's TV facilities at the Kaufman Astoria Studios in New York is expected to be complete in September.

"The advantage of cable is you don't need to make a decision about a show's future in four to six weeks," he said. "Dr. Ruth's show was uneven at first, but we were able to work the bugs out and the personality came through. 'Attitudes' is for, by and stars two women. It's in its third year and growing."

Plans are expansive. "The studio will give us new flexibility," Mr. Burchill says. "You need to take risks and try things to achieve some hits. We might be able to do women's sports like tennis, the Olympics and basketball. And we also want to produce our own drama and an entertainment gossip show."

Peter Diamandis could make $25 million from his Hachette deal.

A gold rush for U.S. titles

By PATRICK REILLY

There's no crest in sight for the wave of foreign acquisitions of U.S. magazines, even with last week's $712 million acquisition of Diamandis Communications Inc. by French communications giant Hachette S.A.

Fueled by the weak dollar, Australian, British, French and West German publishers are targeting individual U.S. titles and entire publishing companies with a fury.

The next group of foreign publishers expected to make buys in the U.S.: U.K. publishers Reed International and press baron Robert Maxwell's Maxwell Communications Corp., and West Germany's Bertelsmann AG.

All have existing properties in the U.S. and have indicated a desire to expand.

Their targets appear to include a wide range of trade and special-interest consumer publications, say magazine industry sources.

The possibilities include Petersen Publishing Co. (publisher of Hot Rod and 'Teen); titles from Capital Cities/ABC's ABC Publishing; trade publisher Edgell Communications; Lane Publishing (Sunset); and Architectural Digest, published by Knapp Communications Corp.

"In Europe, there are regulations where publishers are really prevented from acquiring anything else in their countries," said John Beni, president of Gruner & Jahr USA, a subsidiary of West Germany's Bertelsmann. "They have money and desire or need to expand, so they look to the U.S., where there is economic stability and a segmented magazine market."

An interview with Hachette's U.S. president—P. 90

John Veronis, chairman of Veronis, Suhler & Associates, the investment banker that with Salomon Bros. represented Hachette in the DCI purchase, said:

"Foreign publishers continue to have an enormous appetite for U.S. publications. . . . Don't expect just big buys like Diamandis. You will also see increased interest in joint ventures, taking minority positions and even launching new publications."

One reason is the huge profits U.S. publishers can take away from the deals.

In the Hachette deal, Peter Diamandis, president-ceo, and Prudential Insurance Cos. of America, the company's financial backer, are expected to make a total profit of about $300 million, about $100 million of which will go to Diamandis management.

Close to 100 executives at DCI had stock in the company and will benefit from the sale. All employees who didn't have stock will get a one-time $1,000 bonus.

As for Mr. Diamandis, sources close to the sale estimated he

Sears to try 'superstores'

CHICAGO—Sears, Roebuck & Co. will launch a chain of appliance and home electronics "superstores." The No. 1 U.S. retailer for the first time will sell brand-name appliances in addition to its own brands, Crain's Chicago Business reports. Sears will create a "superstore" environment in existing full-line Sears outlets in late summer or early fall in an undisclosed market. In the initiative's second phase, an undisclosed number of free standing stores operating under a Sears banner will be created. Ogilvy & Mather is Sears' agency of record.

Courts can't stop IBM's breakaway

By JON LAFAYETTE
and GARY LEVIN

NEW YORK—The movement of IBM Corp. business from Lord, Geller, Federico, Einstein to Lord, Einstein, O'Neill & Partners may be unstoppable—despite last week's surprising court order.

Concerned about the assignment of ad projects to Lord Einstein, made up largely of breakaways from Lord Geller, acting New York state Supreme Court Judge Herman Cahn temporarily prohibited Lord Einstein from accepting or soliciting any LGFE clients and from hiring more LGFE employees.

Despite the stay, the IBM project work Lord Einstein received may indeed be open-ended, allowing that relationship to grow.

That would dilute the victory WPP Group Chief Executive Martin Sorrell appeared to win in court April 14, sources say.

The stay was much more comprehensive than the narrow injunction that Judge Cahn had issued against Lord Einstein two weeks ago, and it will last until another hearing is held next week.

Still, the stay "specifically does not include any business now maintained by Lord Einstein," Judge Cahn said.

Making an indirect reference to IBM, he added, "Lord Einstein may finish the business it already has but may not solicit or accept any new business."

Thomas Schwarz, a lawyer with Skadden, Arps, Slate, Meagher & Flom, the law firm representing the new agency, said that "for the short period of time, [the new order] is not something people can't live with."

As for the next hearing, Mr. Schwarz told ADVERTISING AGE that he might call clients to the stand to prove they weren't solicited improperly.

IBM last week confirmed it had shifted "a number of time-dependent advertising items" to Lord Einstein from Lord Geller "to complete IBM's work on a timely basis" (AA, April 11). But IBM watchers believe those projects

Rating TV spots

New system slated to go national

By VERNE GAY

A small Seattle-based media research company will launch a full-scale national TV commercial ratings service, a move almost certain to ignite another battle in media research.

Closely held R.D. Percy Co. announced it would have a 2,000-national-household-meter system operating as early as September 1989. Roger Percy, the company's chairman and the son of former U.S. Sen. Charles Percy (R., Ill.), said the meters would be placed in homes starting this December.

The move portends a major shake-up in the undeveloped but potentially explosive field of commercial ratings.

Agency experts said the new development may not only spur A.C. Nielsen Co. into launching a similar system but could revolutionize network TV buying.

Percy's system also could ultimately shed light on the most pressing question in TV advertising: How many people are actually watching network TV commercials?

And that, research experts said, would ultimately change the way advertisers buy airtime.

If advertisers know the rating of a commercial vs. the program's rating, then they might force networks into pricing their inventory based on the information.

Mr. Percy has said preliminary data show prime-time-commercial ratings are about 17% lower on average than the programs in which they air.

The company's new national system could prompt a battle similar to the one that pitted Nielsen against AGB Television Research in the race for the first national people-meter service.

Nielsen is testing a technology that could also measure commercial ratings; Percy's proposed system is expected

Agency execs handicap shops in Saturn race

By RAYMOND SERAFIN

N W Ayer is "the obvious choice" for Saturn Corp. to make, says one General Motors Corp. ad executive who's been watching GM's new automobile division search for its first agency.

But "nothing on Saturn has ever been obvious," cautioned this observer, who believes Saturn's stated concern for "breaking the mold" gives the other two finalists—Hill, Holliday, Connors, Cosmopulos and Hal Riney & Partners—a shot at the estimated $80 million account.

In an informal survey of GM agency officials, who spoke on condition of anonymity, Ayer ranked as the favorite but Riney's chances were rated nearly as high. HHCC was generally seen as the long shot.

Ayer, HHCC and Riney will meet with Saturn officials the week of May 9 to present the strategic positionings they've developed for GM's planned Japanese import-fighter (AA, April 11). A decision is expected by the end of May.

"We're very pleased that we have three terrific agencies," said Thomas Shaver, director of marketing services for Saturn Corp. Saturn officials have never announced the names of the finalists, but they've confirmed the list has been pared to three.

Ayer, New York, has been a favorite from the start because it already is a GM agency. Since Ayer now handles corporate image work rather than a car division, it wouldn't face the problem of producing work for two or more divisions that might be competing in the same market segment.

Further, Ayer is the largest of the three agencies, an advantage in servicing a national account that will likely need regional strategies and regional servicing if Saturn decides to allow its agency to handle dealer ad co-op groups.

Ayer is the 16th-largest U.S. agency based on worldwide gross income, according to ADVERTISING AGE's 1987 rankings, with offices on both coasts, in the Midwest and in the Southwest.

HHCC, Boston, is 29th, with offices on the East Coast. Its primary automotive experience involves handling Ford Motor Co. dealer groups in New England and New Jersey.

Riney is 52nd but has offices on both coasts and in Chicago. The San Francisco-based agency has handled the $20 million Sterling imported car account for Austin Rover Cars of North America since last May.

Ayer will need to overcome a perception that the other two agencies produce better creative. That could be a handicap, even though Saturn hasn't asked the three agencies to produce speculative creative.

On the creative front, Ayer's dubious new work for Burger King Corp., following the biggest account change ever, comes at an inauspicious time, more than one of the observers said.

Also, the account could be structured in a way that one of the two smaller agencies could handle it without doing the media buying.

There's a precedent on the E&J Gallo Winery account, where Riney has done creative while Ayer bought the media. Or Saturn could tie into the GM media-buying system.

The idea that a shop with a hot creative reputation will win rests also on GM's frequent pronouncements that Saturn represents a commitment to finding innovative new ways to build and market a car.

When GM Chairman Roger Smith announced the division in early 1985, he clearly intended it to take a blank-sheet approach to developing a small car. Everything is being considered from scratch, from technology to management philosophy.

"I give the Saturn folks pretty high marks for their commitment to a fresh approach," one executive said. Another countered with, "That's the public posture, but every time I read something new about Saturn, they seem to be less innovative."#

Pizza Inn takes dough to Chiat

By JENNIFER LAWRENCE

DALLAS—Pizza Inn today will hand the creative assignment on its $15 million ad account to Chiat/-Day, Venice, Calif., a move that will pit the agency against its former client, Pizza Hut.

It also will further stir up the highly competitive $12 billion restaurant pizza business, where a spate of agency changes started last August when PepsiCo's Pizza Hut replaced Chiat/Day with BBDO Worldwide, New York.

Pizza Inn chose Chiat/Day for its creative depth, said Dan Japhet, VP-marketing at the No. 4 chain, but he added that the agency's pizza experience was the deciding factor.

Kelly, Scott & Madison, Chicago, now handles media placement for Pizza Inn.

"Chiat/Day understands the nuances of the category," Mr. Japhet said. "With their knowledge of the restaurant business, there shouldn't be a lot of downtime and we'll be back up faster."

The agency's first task will be to reposition Pizza Inn—a strategy that's been under way since Pantera's Corp. acquired the troubled 650-unit chain last July.

The strategy includes doubling Pizza Inn's ad spending, as well as new-product introductions and an emphasis on home delivery.

Mr. Japhet said Chiat/Day will develop the next step in the "America's most underrated pizza" campaign, which was begun by its

‘Esquire,’ ‘GQ’ fashionably ahead

By Gary Belsky

> “GQ and Esquire each try to lay down the trends for men today, in terms of what he’s wearing and what he cares about.”

One of the fiercest battles in publishing today is between two of the oldest men’s lifestyle magazines in the country: Esquire and Gentlemen’s Quarterly The quest: the well-heeled, male reader and men’s magazine advertisers.

Jay Susman, a 27-year-old commodities trader from New York, is a regular reader of both magazines. And, frequently because of his hectic schedule, Mr. Susman says he must choose between the two.

While management at both magazines deny that they have the same readers, according to Mr. Susman, “GQ and Esquire each try to lay down the trends for men today, in terms of what he’s wearing and what he cares about.”

Of course, you won’t hear Esquire or GQ admit to this.

“Without question, the two magazines compete for some of the same readers,” says GQ Editor Art Cooper.

“Not in the least,” says Lee Eisenberg, Esquire’s editor. “We’re aiming at two separate demographic groups.” However, both magazines have commissioned studies that each claims will set the standard for defining modern man and his lifestyle.

In the past few years, Esquire has revamped its fashion coverage, gaining ground in what was once the almost proprietary domain of GQ. Conversely, GQ has lessened its reliance on fashion pages, and has paid more attention to its editorial content.

Both magazines have changed the style of their cover art in recent years as well, relying on celebrity covers to draw attention at the newsstand.

Esquire and GQ are far ahead of the competition in circulation. According to Audit Bureau of Circulations’ FAS-FAX report for six months ending Dec. 31, 1987, Esquire and GQ have total paid circulation of 705,278 and 686,842, respectively.

Fairchild Publications’ M has made the most progress in recent years by targeting older, wealthier men, but it still ranks with Men’s Look and Men’s Guide to Fashion in the second tier of men’s lifestyle publications. M’s total paid circulation for the same time period is 138,205.

In the head-to-head fight in circulation, GQ made the most gains last year. Though the magazine’s newsstand sales actually decreased 2.7% from a year earlier, subscriptions increased 12.8% and total paid circulation was up 3.6%.

Esquire, meanwhile, showed an increase of 4.4% in paid subscriptions for the last half of 1987; that combined with a 15.9% drop in newsstand sales accounted for a marginal 0.4% increase in total paid circulation. Esquire’s publisher says the reason for the magazine’s decrease in newsstand sales may be in part that the redesign of the book is becoming familiar to readers and that the “newness” is wearing off.

Both magazines have redesigned covers; one indication of GQ’s cover transformation is the use of celebrities rather than models.

Esquire has revamped its editorial pages with a month-in/month-out focus on fashion.

GQ’s steady increase in circulation was due, in part, to a change in consumer perception of the magazine. For years, observers note, GQ was generally referred to as a magazine for gays, and its readership barely reflected the heterosexual public. But since joining GQ in 1983, Mr. Cooper has succeeded in changing the magazine’s image and broadening its appeal.

“I think they’ve definitely broadened the product,” says Paul Zuckerman, senior VP and director of media planning at DDB Needham, New York.

“The fact is, you don’t have to be a peacock to read GQ anymore,” says Publisher Jack Kliger. He maintains, “Gays are still considered very important readers at GQ.”

The magazine’s management reasoned that to compete with Esquire for readers and advertisers, its focus would have to be broadened.

The transformation began with the cover. Once dominated by male models, GQ’s covers are now territory for movie, television and sports stars. Recent covers have featured actors James Woods and Kevin Kline and basketball player Isiah Thomas.

And, the magazine got some national publicity when other media picked up quotes from GQ’s April cover story in which St. Louis Cardinals’ star Ozzie Smith blasted the team’s manager, Whitey Herzog, for going into last fall’s World Series “like he expected us to lose.”

GQ’s makeover is also evident in its editorial content. A recent issue contained nearly as many nonfashion feature stories as those on fashion.

Nonfashion stories frequently deal with women. For example, actress Blair Brown was profiled in an article in the March 1988; another story asked the question “What Do Women Want?” Bringing women into its pages was less a move towards snaring female readers than it was an effort to grab the male reader “who has grown up with a woman as an equal in life,” says Mr. Kliger.

According to GQ, those men’s median age is 26 and they earn $19,164. While those demographics are far different from what Esquire claims as its target reader (median age of 36.8, income of $25,866), both magazines seek essentially the same man—one with buying power and a curiousity about how other men are thinking.

Esquire disagrees, despite the fact that recent editorial changes have brought it closer to GQ’s fashion emphasis. Most notable in Esquire’s new look is its month-in/month-out focus on fashion. Not so long ago, the magazine relegated its fashion coverage to two issues a year—spring and fall.

Then reflecting an increasing awareness of fashion by the American male, “We redeployed our [fashion] pages over the course of the year,” says Mr. Eisenberg.

Esquire denies the move is an attempt to compete with GQ. In fact, Esquire Publisher Randy Jones says the magazine’s eight to 10 editorial fashion pages each month essentially equals the total pages that used to be contained in the twice-yearly “Esquire Collection.”

“We hardly want to be another GQ,” says Mr. Jones. Nonetheless, Esquire recently hired Robert E. Beauchamp, the former fashion editor at GQ, to oversee its fashion coverage.

The editorial content of the magazine was revamped earlier because of a change in demographics of its readership. A year ago, near the time it was acquired by the Hearst Corp., Esquire announced that its readership was growing older. To attract this more mature reader, the magazine altered its editorial content. “Story selection definitely changed,” says Mr. Eisenberg. “There are no more ‘Should I?’ or ‘Would I?’ articles. Now the stories are for grown-ups who are facing reality.”

With the September 1986 issue, Esquire increased the size of the book. The new format was a play for readers and for advertisers, who would presumably be attracted by the book because of its use of a standard page format, magazine management says.

Although the new look apparantly has failed to grab readers at the newsstand, Esquire saw a slight increase in ad revenue from $29.0 million in 1986 to $30.5 million in 1987. “We’ve done a good job in making marketers understand that men are different now, that they are very involved in purchasing home products and that they’re pushing shopping

'Us' gains, 'People' profits from lead

While no longer strictly head-on rivals, both have strikingly similar audience profiles.

By Patrick Reilly

People and Us. It seems they were once cut from the same cloth. On the nation's newsstands and in reader's minds, Us was a clone of People.

But while the occasional reader may still confuse the two, it's clear now the two magazines are on diverging paths.

Us is just now beginning to hit its stride after years of floundering, but it has yet to firmly establish its identity. On the other hand, People, the originator of "personality journalism," continues to do well for parent Time Inc. Yet the magazine is struggling with maturity to find the zip that once made it a success.

The editorial mix of the two magazines has changed. The weekly People's articles are a mixture of both celebrities and the newsworthy. For example, past stories have included the rescue attempt of a baby girl in Texas and Rob Lowe's love interests.

"When Us was launched, I was circulation director at People and we used to think about Us a lot, but every day the gap between us gets wider," says Donald Elliman, People's publisher. "People is only 40% celebrities or entertainment industry stories. Our research tells us that people like that mix."

In the past year, Us, published once every two weeks, has put its focus strictly on entertainment and celebrities. "We wanted to make Us more elegant and still sell it. Last year we decided Us would be a celebrity and entertainment magazine only," says Anthea Disney, who was appointed editor of Us in July 1987 after serving as deputy managing editor at the New York Daily News. "Us meets people at the 'up' point in their careers."

In terms of ad pages and circulation, People is the leader. As of December 1987, People's average circulation was 3.3 million, a 9% increase from 1986.

"People is the stronger entity," said Paul Zuckerman, senior VP-director of media planning and operations, DDB Needham, New York. "Because of its draw, it's the closest thing to TV in print."

With only a little more than one-third of People's circulation, Us reached the 1.2 million mark as of December 1987. However, that was a booming 22.5% increase from 1986.

In ad pages, People also leads, but it had a tough 1987. Its pages totaled 3,581, a 4.8% drop from 1986, while ad revenue totaled $266 million, a 0.6% decrease. Us 1987 ad pages totaled 618, a 5.8% increase from 1986, and ad revenue increased to $13.2 million, a 17.4% rise.

BEAUTY AND THE BOTTLE
MARGAUX HEMINGWAY became a supermodel overnight, and overnight she vanished—into alcohol, bad marriages, rivalry with sister Mariel and thoughts of suicide. At Betty Ford, she faced the truth. This is her story.

Such widely varying statistics give credence to the assertion of People's Mr. Elliman that the two magazines are "in totally different businesses."

However, while no longer strictly head-on rivals, People and Us have strikingly similar audience profiles.

The median age of People readers is about 35 years old; at Us, the median age is about 32. While the perception among most media directors is that People's readers are decidedly more upscale, its readers' median income is $30,769, not far ahead of Us' median income of $30,329. As for gender, 65% of People's readers are women, while Us has 68% female readership, according to the magazines.

With its large display of color photographs and bent for celebrities, Us has targeted a younger audience.

Mr. Zuckerman says, "There's more substance to People, but currently there is no young, general interest magazine except for Us. There's lots of color and that's Jann Wenner's (Us editor-in-chief and chairman of Us Magazine Co.) approach. The color is excellent, but that won't make it a better magazine."

It is Mr. Wenner who has kept Us alive when many in the industry thought the magazine was finished. Launched in May 1977 by The New York Times Co., it was bought by Macfadden Co. in 1980. After languishing under Macfadden, Mr. Wenner's Straight Arrow Publishers (also publisher of Rolling Stone) and the Los Angeles-based Lorimar-Telepictures became co-owners of the magazine in July 1985.

Mr. Wenner maintains control, and in the past two years appointed most of the magazine's top business staff. Sources close to Mr. Wenner says he has been negotiating to buy Lorimar's half of the magazine, and industry observers say Lorimar is expected to sell.

But Anne Holton, Us publisher, says Lorimar-Telepictures now is not so eager to sell and has committed to maintain its 50% share for two more years. Lorimar is especially interested after a first quarter performance in 1988 in which ad pages rose by 31% to 132 over the same period in 1987. In July, Us will raise its rate base to 1.2 million, a 9.1% increase.

People, too, is expecting a brighter 1988, though the stock market crash in October may slow down the expected growth.

People's sheer size—it carries more consumer electronics ad pages than any other consumer magazine—makes it more susceptible to major swings in the economy. No other magazine in the Time Inc. stable, with the exception of Time, could top People's ad revenue of $266 million in 1987.

"We expect a good year but it will be heavily weighted to the fourth quarter, and we don't know how that will turn out," says Mr. Elliman. He says People's ad pages, single copy and subscriptions sales for the first quarter in 1988 were ahead of the same period last year.

In 1988, People will also get a new look. James Gaines, managing editor, has called in some of the business's top magazine designers to submit ideas for a redesign. There have also been rumors that People's trademark black-and-white editorial pages would use four-color photographs this year, but a People spokeswoman says color pages are not planned.

Us executives say the success they have had with color editorial pages has forced People to consider color and to redesign in general. But People disagrees. "We are [redesigning] because we are 14 years old and Jim Gaines strongly feels that it's time for a new look," says Mr. Elliman. "A contemporary look is core to the magazine, and we want to have a fresher look."

Mr. Elliman says the redesign is not a "repositioning," and that, in fact, it "won't be a huge revolution." He adds the changes could appear in late 1988 and may be tested first in regional markets to gauge reader reaction.

The redesigns are crucial in selling magazines in the supermarket and on newsstands. Us

Both fight for the successful female reader— and both claim dominance in their market

By Christopher Slaybaugh

Though Savvy and Working Woman both compete for the successful female reader, each magazine takes a different approach in attracting its audience. Unsurprisingly, both claim dominance in this upscale market.

These magazines target the 11 million women in management and the professions, a subgroup of the 47 million women the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics says are employed nationally.

Leaders at both magazines contest each other's claims to dominance. Savvy's Publisher, Kristin A. Norrgard, says the difference in circulation between Savvy's 400,000 and Working Woman's 900,000, can be explained. "We're class, and [Working Woman's] mass. You can increase your circulation all you want, but we don't want to do that and dilute the demographic profile of the magazine."

Working Woman's Editor in Chief, Anne Mollegen Smith, responds, "That's probably what I would say if I were in [Savvy's] shoes, because the comparative size of our circulations makes that an attractive explanation. But if you look at the demographics of the magazine, I don't think that holds up. Our women's group is quite definitely an elite group."

Ms. Smith says Working Woman, published by Working Woman/McCall's Group, New York, is targeted to "career women, not just women who have a job." Working Woman Publisher Carol Anderson Taber agrees, adding that the magazine's subscribers have an average individual employment income (IEI) of $37,800 and average household income of $76,700 with 74% holding professional or managerial jobs.

"Since Simmons [Market Research Bureau] began, we have delivered a higher concentration of professional/management women than any other women's magazine measured year in year out," she says.

Ms. Norrgard says Savvy, published by Family Media Publications, New York, targets readers 25 to 49-years-old who earn more than $25,000. "We're aiming at the upper-scale career woman. We're probably the most upscale women's magazine out there, in terms of female IEI."

According to the most recent subscriber study commissioned by Savvy through Simmons Market Research Bureau, New York, subscribers have a median IEI of $27,500, median household income of $48,300, and a median age of 37 years.

While both magazines try to attract similar readers, they maintain different editorial slants. Working Woman devotes two-thirds of its editorial content to business stories—"not business news," says Ms. Taber, "but business trends, management strategies and philosphies, and career management."

She adds that the magazine is "written to a successful mentality. Look at our cover. We use the words 'master,' 'power,' 'achieve,' 'success'—words like that have, sadly, never been used on women's covers before."

She maintains, however, that the business content is not only of interest to women. "What makes us a women's magazine is the services." These services, comprising the other third of the magazine, cover such issues as health and fashion from a career angle, says Ms. Smith.

Moving away from its own largely business posture, Savvy underwent changes last spring that included a new editorial profile, a redesigned cover and a change in its tagline from "The Magazine for the Executive Woman" to "For the Successful Woman."

The magazine now profiles women inside and outside the corporate world, according to Ms. Norrgard. "Success doesn't lie just in the corporate arena. We profile women entrepreneurs and women who are successful in all careers . . . " Recent issues have featured fashion designer Cynthia Steffe, former Transportation Secretary Elizabeth Dole, and newscaster Connie Chung.

Ms. Norrgard emphasizes timeliness, a quality she says was brought to the magazine in August/September 1986 by editor-in-chief Annalyn Swan, formerly Newsweek senior editor. "She's predicted what was going to be hot down the road. She has an incredible knack for getting on the newsstand what's hot right then, what's being talked about on radio, television, and the newspapers."

Savvy regularly devotes space to business, fashion and beauty, travel, health, and food. Ms. Norrgard summarizes the book as a "full interest magazine for today's high-achieving career woman. It shows her how to live life with style."

Common to both magazines is healthy growth. Comparing the last six months of 1987 with the same period a year before, Savvy balanced a 19.2% increase in subscriptions with a 35.4% decrease in single-copy sales for a 16.7% increase in total paid circulation, according to Audit Bureau of Circulations' FAS-FAX report. Working Woman increased both

Network targets working women

When Career Women Networking's president, Talia Y. Carner, left her previous job as publisher of Savvy in 1985, she took with her nagging doubts about the efficacy of advertising in women's business magazines.

"When I was with Savvy, advertisers were asking me questions such as 'There are 52 million employed women in the U.S. but Savvy and Working Woman's combined circulation—even by now, it's only a million three. Where are the other 50 million women?' "

"Women in business," she says, "tell us how they work harder, how they develop their professional skills, how they need to run the extra mile compared with men.

"But you couldn't sell them Savvy at $9 a year or Working Woman at $12—and these are good magazines."

So in 1985, Ms. Carner started Advertorial Inc., an enterprise to write and sell advertorials. But soon she realized that she first had to investigate the habits of career women.

What she found was a common denominator among groups of women in business. "In every single industry, women had started their own professional association. Law, medicine, accounting, journalism, real estate. You name it, they started a professional association."

This led to another question: Why were women who were unwilling to buy a magazine ready to pay $40 to $150 a year to belong to an association and to take the time to go to seminars and meetings?

"The signals were that these women in industry feel different and maybe they did not have enough recognition, maybe they felt there's something in their industry that sets them apart."

Ms. Carner says she had found the three ingredients she was looking for: commitments of emotion, money and time.

By translating "this phenomenon into something workable for the advertising industry," she says, "an advertiser that talks to these women right in their marketplace will benefit more than an advertiser using a more traditional approach."

Over a period of time Career Women Networking evolved. The New York-based company creates inserts for women's trade journals.

One obstacle that faced Ms. Carner was a negative attitude toward advertising held by some of the associations. "It took me 15 months to go to the various professional associations and educate them about advertising," she says, "to convince them that advertising is not dirty, that it has subscriptions and single-copy sales 6.9% and 80.3%, respectively, for an increase of 10.3% in total paid circulation.

Working Woman was named to a list of " 'Triple Play' Best Performers" by Capelle's Circular Report, published by Whitaker Newsletters, Westfield, N.J. The book was one of 16 titles to make the list of magazines that were able to raise cover price, increase units sold and increase the percentage of copies sold by retailers over a six-year period ending in 1987.

Working Woman's price was raised 50¢ to $2.50, while sales rose 111% and the percent retailers sold rose 10.5%.

Working Woman sold 1,164 ad pages in 1987, down 10.3% from the previous year.

Ms. Taber attributes the slump to a decline in the amount of ads placed by office equipment advertisers, which she says, resulted from fluctuation in the yen. This year, the magazine is expected to show a 6% increase in ad pages from the previous year. And, she says, February 1988 carried a larger amount of ad pages than any previous February. June is also a record breaker for the book; the issue will carry 110 ad pages, according to Ms. Taber, up 28% from the previous year's issue.

In comparison, Savvy sold 448 ad pages in 1987, a gain of 8.7%.

Both magazines attribute part of their success to the rising number of employed women. "In essence, both [Working Woman and Savvy] are delivering women with money. It's the market that the advertiser is buying, not the editorial," says Ms. Taber.

"One reason for our spectacular growth has been the spectacular growth of our audience," says Ms. Smith. " . . . if there weren't this burgeoning category of women to whom very few other media are talking, we wouldn't have been able to do this."

The reader profile has changed, says Ms. Norrgard. "She's been in business for a while, she's a little more established, she's further along in her career," she says. "Therefore, you've got to address how these women have changed."

Both books rely on direct mail to sell subscriptions. Patricia Gardiner, VP circulation for Family Media, says using "highly targeted lists", Savvy ran a direct-mail sweepstakes promotion. The sweepstakes is shared with Family Media's nine other magazines. The promotion includes a mail-in card for a free copy. The magazine has not offered premiums recently. Ms. Gardiner says promotions are guided by Family Media Chairman Robert Riordan.

Like Savvy, Working Woman has not relied heavily on premiums, although some mailings since 1982 have offered editorial premiums, such as books by well-known authors on issues the magazine covers, according to Ms. Smith.

Since forming partnership with Time Inc., New York, at the end of 1986, Working Woman has experimented with non-editorial premiums like a purpose, that it educates, that it's on target."

The associations were quick, however, to embrace the ad revenue, particularly because many attract little or no advertising on their own, she says. Each journal receives payment at a set rate multiplied by the book's share of total circulation.

Network published its first trial insert in November/December of last year. The signature, which provided four pages of ads, was inserted into 12 journals that had a total of 370,000 subscribers.

Career Women Networking's cost-per-thousand is $23, says Ms. Carner, about one third lower than the rates of other magazines.

She says reception by advertisers has been favorable, enough that the third insert, published in March/April, covered two signatures. This allows advertisers to buy spreads.

Advertisers include Chrysler, The Quality Paperback Book Club, TWA, Simmons College M.B.A. program and No-Nonsense pantyhose.

Career Women Networking currently has inserts in 13 publications, from Woman Engineer to Press Woman, for a circulation of 475,000 to 530,000, depending on the issues.

Like the publishers of Savvy and Working Woman, Ms. Carner lays claim to the top-of-the-pyramid working woman. "Our readers have reached the higher echelons in their fields. Among accountants, we have chief financial officers; among lawyers we took only the National Association of Women Lawyers, and they tend to be on the federal level . . . "

In addition to direct advertising, Career Women Networking offers an advertiser response card, which allows Networking to build a mailing list that it sells to marketers. Networking also offers advertisers participation in women's trade shows.

Business books battle for readers

By Gary Belsky

It's a story that any business editor would want to publish: three leading competitors, faced with an increasingly sophisticated and demanding customer, battle for dominance in their field.

But don't expect any of the Big Three business magazines to report the story. Why? Because the long-time competitors are the Big Three business magazines: Business Week, Forbes and Fortune.

In recent years, Business Week has made the greatest strides in total paid circulation and has posted the highest percentage gains in both subscriptions and newsstand sales.

For the last six months of 1987, Business Week's total paid circulation increased 8.8% from the same period in 1986, to 857,958. By comparison, Time Inc.'s Fortune increased 2.5%, to 658,850, while Forbes managed a modest 1.0% jump to 740,307.

> ■ The troika's tactics are similar, despite differences in the way they cover the news

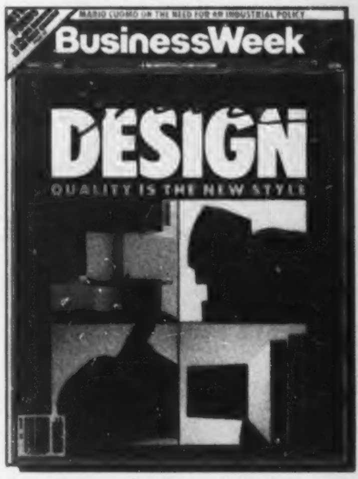
"Their problem is that they are all around 600,000 to 800,000 in circulation," says magazine consultant James Kobak, of James B. Kobak & Co., New York. "To get that last one or two subscribers, they have to keep fighting. The whole game is getting new subscribers."

The troika's subscriber tactics are similar, despite differences in the way they cover the world of business.

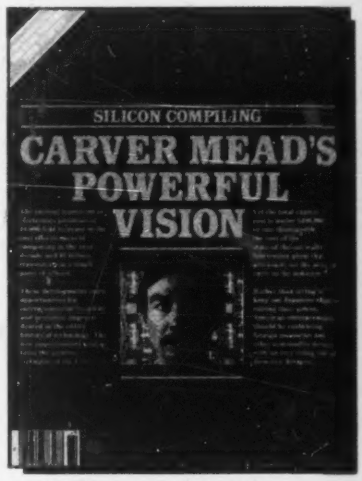
Business Week is the only weekly among the three; Forbes and Fortune are every-other-weeklies.

The three magazines' marketing strategies are based on this premise: the maturity of the market and intense competition for readers necessitates the use of stimulants such as premiums, discounts or short-term trial subscriptions, industry analysts say.



Greater use of color and boider covers have made Business Week a more visually appealing magazine.

For example, Forbes also offer readers a short-term subscriptions of six issues for $9.75.



To shed its image of being solely a magazine for investors, Forbes' expanded its business news coverage.

In large part, Business Week's gain in circulation has been fueled by extensive use of stimulants. According to Audit Bureau of Circulations figures for the first half of 1987, 84.8% of new Business Week subscriptions were sold with either merchandise or editorial premiums, or at a discount. In fact, more than half of those new

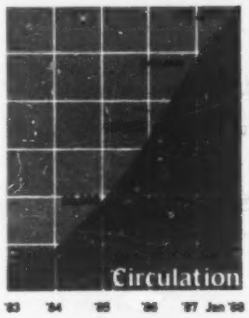
Not long ago, Fortune revamped its editorial mix and increased its emphasis on international business news.

WOULD YOU PAY $1,350 FOR A MAGAZINE?

Online Today readers already have —and they're looking for ways to spend more.

Before the average Online Today readers even saw their first issue, they had already spent approximately $1,350* (and often more) on their computer system and peripherals. That figure includes a subscription to CompuServe, the largest (and still growing) online information service in the country. As a CompuServe subscriber, our spender receives Online Today, the monthly magazine with features devoted exclusively to computers and communications.



These high-tech trendsetters are also looking for the newest and the best in electronics, stereos, cameras, cars and computer accessories. And aren't they the kind of people you want your ad to reach?

An ever-growing audience.

An ad that appears in one issue of Online Today is seen by almost half a million of our computer-using readers. And because CompuServe adds approximately 8,000 subscribers each month, an ad that runs for a year gets seen by even more new readers.

High-tech, high income.

According to CompuServe's September 1987 Subscriber Study of Online Today readers:
- median household income is $56,500
- 94% are college-educated
- 94% are males
- 87% of males are 25-55
- 74% are in executive and professional positions or technical fields
- 100% are computer users; 71% use their computers for both business and personal needs
- 75% use a computer at work
- 97% use a computer at home

Reach the big spenders without spending the big bucks.

A buy in Online Today is extremely cost-effective. It's an excellent value based on such a select audience.

subscriptions were sold below the cover price. Forbes and Fortune sold 28.9% and 25.0% of their new subscriptions, respectively, at a discount.

Business Week's readership rise is a product of several factors, including an aggressive sales program and improved editorial product, observers say.

Business Week's Business Information Plan, or BIP, has greatly contributed to the magazine's success in gaining corporate subscriptions. To sell group subscriptions to corporations, a regional sales force uses a face-to-face approach in the sales calls that it makes to 1,000 businesses around the country.

"All three business magazines derive most of their subscribers from direct mail," says John M. Thornton, Forbes' director of circulation.

Similarly, all three use premiums. Mr. Thornton says that Forbes doesn't induce subscribers with "novelty" items like the competition does. However, Forbes does use premiums.

Malcolm Forbes' business magazine is considered the best investment magazine of the Big Three. Forbes offers prospective subscribers several editorial reprints, including its mutual fund survey and an article that discloses stock analysts' favorite investment stock.

"[The editorial premium] is a capsule version of what Forbes is about," Mr. Thornton says.

Fortune, like Forbes, offers customers editorial premiums, including "The Complete Fortune Financial and Tax Planner." However, like Business Week, the bulk of Fortune's premiums is merchandise. It's a practice, says Fortune's Publisher James Hayes, that's well received at parent company Time Inc., where such products as telephones have long been used as premiums.

Also, like Business Week, Fortune avoids what it views as frivolous premiums, reasoning that their desired subscribers—the 40-year-old male, in middle or upper-level management, with an income of $70,000 or more—wouldn't be interested in plastic phones or radios as gifts, according to Mr. Hayes.

Instead, both magazines reward new subscribers with "business related" gifts: Fortune offers a planner or dictionary and is currently testing sending out a business-oriented videocassette; Business Week gives a desktop solar calendar and also is testing an "office on the go," a small zip-up holder which contains such useful items as tape and scissors.

For all of its promotional techniques, however, industry experts attribute most of Business Week's success to Editor Stephen Sheperd. Mr. Sheperd has achieved what some consultants describe as an almost miraculous turnaround in Business Week's editorial product.

"Far and away, Business Week has made the greatest progress [in changing the book]," says John Gray, senior VP and director of media planning at J. Walter Thompson USA, New York. "They've done an outstanding job in redesigning. The whole editorial product says 'read me.' "

Before Mr. Sheperd became editor three-and-a-half years ago, Business Week was a dull, predictable read, observers say. Since then, however, the magazine has been overhauled.

REAL PAID CIRCULATION
REAL SELLING OPPORTUNITIES

ABC and the Journal mean paid circulation
The Audit Bureau of Circulations (ABC) is a respected, independent organization that verifies paid circulation. The prestigious ABC logo is not applied to publications with circulations that represent future expectations, "wish lists," or over-the-transom distribution.

The only accounting publication that has earned the right to display the ABC symbol is the Journal of Accountancy.

It pays to invest in real paid circulation
Paid subscribers represent your best selling opportunities for both new and repeat business. It just doesn't make sense to advertise in publications with unpaid or unaudited circulations.

A 300,000 paid circulation that dwarfs all others
The Journal's 300,000 paid is higher than the circulations of all other accounting publications (whether paid, controlled and/or future expectations) COMBINED. If you like even larger numbers, consider our 600,000 total audience — based on at least two readers per copy.

A $21.17 CPM you can bank on
The Journal of Accountancy's paid cost per thousand (CPM) — $21.17 — is as straightforward and as verfiable as our ABC audit. Here's the arithmetic:

$21.17 CPM

Bridal magazines 'gloriously strong'

By Tim Harris

Bride's and Modern Bride, bookends of the bridal magazine market, often share readership, editorial content and advertisers. Unsurprisingly, advertisers buy pages in both magazines, "but there is still plenty of battling in the trenches," says Howard Friedberg, recently named publisher of Modern Bride.

An examination of the February/March issues of Conde Nast's Bride's and Cahners Publishing Co.'s Modern Bride reveals how this battling occurs. The ad index in the February/March issue of Bride's lists ads for 106 different brands of bridesmaid, mother-of-the-bride and bridal fashions. The index in the competing issue of Modern Bride lists 79 such advertisers.

The big bridal fashion manufacturers advertise different fashions of the same line in both magazines, allowing them to show their product effectively but without overlapping advertising costs.

For example, Ilissa Bridals, a well-known bridal designer, advertises two fashion lines in the February/March issue of Modern Bride In the competing Bride's, the designer features different dresses from the same line.

Following a variation on this strategy is Jessica McClintock, which alternates ads by issue date. The February/March issue of Bride's features McClintock's Signatures Bridal Collection; the same line is presented in the April/May issue of Modern Bride. This process, according to Mr. Friedberg, is called rotating ads. "It's really a question of funding. Essentially, for these companies [rotating ads] is the best of both worlds." He says the process is also cost-efficient, making the most sense for companies who have smaller ad budget. By alternating its advertising between the two magazines by issue date, companies can also keep from duplicating ads.

With the availability to advertise in both books, companies also can exert a stabilizing influence on already sky-high advertising prices. According to Mr. Friedberg, "A four-color, full-page ad in Modern Bride costs a company $20,000. It's expensive on a CPM basis." Comparatively, a four-color, full-page ad in Bride's costs $21,220.

New bridal magazine marching south

Pace Communications, Greensboro, N.C., is depending on the strong regional identity among people who live in the South to help Southern Bride compete against Modern Bride and Bride's for advertisers and newsstand sales.

"The power of the Southern identity is difficult to understand if you're not from the South," says Publisher Bonnie McElveen-Hunter. "But there's a fraternity in the South, a sense of belonging."

The power of this identity is behind the successes of Southern Living and Southern Accents, according to Ms. McElveen-Hunter. "It's a unique market."

The every-other-monthly premiered March/April and is aimed at brides-to-be in 17 states. "The 17 states we define as Southern have about 43% of the weddings [in the country]," says Ms. McElveen-Hunter.

Initial newsstand distribution of Southern Bride was concentrated in the South with token availability in Chicago, Los Angeles and New York.

In its first issue, the magazine carried 116 pages of advertising. "It's a real vote of confidence from advertisers," she says.

Bill Levkoff, a well-known brides' maid and prom dress designer who advertises heavily in Bride's, bought 27 pages of ads in the magazine's premiere issue. An additional ten pages were placed by Mendicino, another New York-based wedding and prom fashion designer.

Ms. McElveen-Hunter says the second issue carries comparable advertising pages while "the third issue has double the number of ad pages than the premiere issue did."

A four-color, full page ad costs $9,688 per issue. According-

Bridal magazines

Future competition between 'Modern Bride' and 'Bride's' is expected to be most intense in the area of attracting and servicing advertisers.

Eliot Marion, publisher of Bride's, tries to distinguish the magazine from Modern Bride in a publisher's memo that accompanies the 912-page February/March issue. He writes, " . . . the February/March 1988 issue puts Bride's . . . in a class by itself"; the issue has 704 pages of paid advertising, a record for a single-issue consumer magazine.

However, to the consumer, there may be little difference between the two books. "The magazine with the cosmetics ads is Bride's," says Mr. Friedberg. " . . . Otherwise, if you switched the covers, you'd have a hard time telling the magazines apart."

There is, indeed, much editorial, circulation and advertising duplication between these magazines. For example, the 698-page February/March issue of Modern Bride has such departments as "Wedding Planning," "Setting Up Your First Home" and "Honeymoon Travel." The competing Bride's has similar departments: "Planning Your Wedding," "Your Home Together" and "Travel."

The balanced, head-to-head competition between these magazines also carries over to circulation. According to the Audit Bureau of Circulations' FAS-FAX report, Bride's total circulation for the six-month period ending Dec. 31, 1987, was 371,019, about 50,000 larger than Modern Bride's total circulation for the same period.

For both magazines, about 87% of total sales for the six-month period came from single-copy sales. "There is huge duplication. Once a woman identifies herself as a bride, she'll probably buy both," says Mr. Friedberg.

Each magazine keeps the same reader for the same nine-to-12 month period. "A bride will stay with us the length of her engagement," says Mr. Marion. "Then, some buy the next issue after the wedding, while they decorate the bedroom and buy flatware."

These two magazines share many advertisers. Indeed, within certain industries advertisers recognize that they have to buy space in both magazines or they risk missing the customer completely.

"We have a transient audience, and we can give them three or four impressions [of a product]," says Mr. Friedberg. "Companies such as Wedgwood know that once they've captured a bride, she keeps buying ing to the publisher, Pace will institute a group buy program starting next year which will include Inflight magazine. By establishing this network, the company anticipates travel advertisers to buy in both Southern Bride and Inflight.

To put a distinctly Southern foot forward and to attract readers, the magazine uses an editorial approach that is both upper-crust and regional.

The premiere issue features photographs of Southern couples at their wedding receptions; one article interviews newlyweds adjusting to married life during the groom's third year of law school. "We call this our Town & Country approach," says Ms. McElveen-Hunter.

Also, says Editor Alex Gant, "We want our cover to be softer, sweeter [than Modern Bride and Bride's].

"Women down here read the national magazines but are not necessarily able to head off to Macy's to buy some featured earrings. But we refer to what's available in our reader's backyard," she says.

She describes the setting of the magazine's bridal fashion pictorials as " . . . deliberately, ridiculously Southern." In these pictorials, featured bridal gowns range in price from $450 to $9,000, and one train costs $7,000.

Finally, while Bride's touts an annual grooms issue, "[Southern Bride] calls the groom the ultimate accessory," says Ms. Gant.

Ms. McElveen-Hunter says that the magazine has distributed 170,000 issues for each of the first three issues, and depending on the sell-through with distributors, the number may climb.

Readers find 'Utne' a solid alternative

Last year, Utne Reader, a national, every-other-monthly digest, decided that it was time to increase its circulation base. The Minneapolis-based book started accepting ads.

Since opening to advertisers in May/June 1987, the magazine's total paid circulation has jumped 50% to 75,000, according to Mike Tronnes, ad manager. And, 1987 marks the first year the book has been audited by the Audit Bureau of Circulations.

The Utne Reader, which tags itself "the best of the alternative press," was founded in 1983 by Eric Utne, publisher, and compiles news and opinions from such publications as The American Spectator, Harper's Magazine, The Nation, The Progressive, Rolling Stone, Spy and Village Voice.

Articles appearing in past issues have included: "A view from Chicago: Mike Royko on Jesse Jackson," "Start making sense: David Byrne's thoroughly post-modern dilemma," "The CIA's role in Nelson Mandela's imprisionment" and, most recently, "High-risk high tech: Who decides how it is used?"

"[Utne Reader] looks at issues and how they affect people politically, socially and personally," says Mr. Tronnes.

With the current March/April issue, the magazine increased the size of the book, upgraded its paper stock and began using four-color. The changes, according to Mr. Tronnes, were made to accomodate advertisers that previously had to produce ads to fit the digest's non-standard size.

'The best of the alternative press' recently increased the size of the magazine to accomodate advertisers.

The results so far have been encouraging for the two-person ad department. "Out of 86 advertisers that bought ads in first three issues [since opening the book to advertising], 65 reran their ads by the following year's May/June issue . . . " The May/June 1988 issue carries 18 pages of advertising.

" . . . I think we've come pretty far in one year. We're starting to attract more recognizable national advertisers, and as our circulation approaches 100,000, it should pick up even more," says Mr. Tronnes.

National advertisers include Barnes & Noble, Bantam Books, National Public Radio, Quality Paperback Book Club and Vantage Press.

"The one point I try to get across when talking to advertisers is that they're able to reach a really special reader," says Mr. Tronnes. "Our readers are concerned in personal growth and society. Ninety-three percent of those who read the magazine are college-educated."

carts too," says Mr. Jones.

GQ's ad revenues grew from $33.2 million in 1986 to $36.7 million in 1987. A four-color, full-page ad in GQ costs $21,950. Comparatively, Esquire's cost for a four-color, full-page ad is $27,200.

To meet its guaranteed subscriber rate base, Esquire has been sending issues to 40,000 people whose subscriptions have expired, according to the ABC. Further, the magazine has been discounting its subscription price.

For the first six months of 1987, nearly 80% of Esquire's 213,000 new subscriptions were discounted. By comparison, GQ discounted less than 15%.

GQ, like other Conde Nast Corp. properties, is driven by single-copy sales. With virtually no consumer advertising or mailings, readers are exposed to GQ at the newsstand, and has more than twice the single copy sales of Esquire.

One of the reason for passing Esquire in single copy sales is GQ's aggressive move into supermarkets. "Specifically," says Mr. Kliger, "we got pockets at the '10 items or less' checkout lanes."

GQ, which offers no discounts except to the trade, has primed subscription sales by increasing insert card production, Mr. Kliger says. The magazine's subscriptions, in fact, did increase from 270,942 for the last six months of 1986, to 305,709 one year later. The increases, Mr. Kliger says, come despite a hike in cover price from $2.50 to $3.00, and without offering any incentives. "That showed people were going to buy this magazine, regardless," he says.

'Lear's second issue off and running

For a new magazine, the second issue is as important as the first. If advertising pages drop off too drastically it could mean trouble. If Lear's second issue is any indication, the magazine for women over 40 has a bright future. Still, it's too early to call Lear's, published every other month, a runaway success.

After running 76 advertising pages in its debut March/April issue, Lear's second May/June issue has weighed in with 46 ad pages, a drop of about 40%. Michele Magazine, publisher of Lear's, says a start-up is considered to be "doing well" if the second issue carries 50% of the first issue's ad pages.

"The reader reaction shows we are striking an emotional chord in readers, and we are getting the same reaction from advertisers and [ad] agency people," says Ms. Magazine. "We are getting lots of white mail, that's when readers send in their money without even finding a subscription card."

In addition to new advertisers, Lear's says its second May/June issue carries 46 pages of ads.

With a rate base of 200,000, Lear's distributed 475,000 copies of the first issue, which completely sold out on newsstands in Los Angeles and New York. Ms. Magazine estimates the first issue sold 125,000 on newsstands, 350,000 were subscriptions.

Of the magazine's total distribution, 25,000 copies of Lear's were sent free to selected "upscale households," a practice, Ms. Magazine says, that will continue at least through 1988. With reader reaction strong, Ms. Magazine says Lear's will publish 10 issues in 1989. A rate base increase is also being considered for the September/October issue, she says.

Lear's launch was helped by the massive pre-launch publicity owner Frances Lear was able to generate. Surprisingly, Lear's leading advertising category is automotive, with ads in the second issue from BMW, Lincoln-Mercury and Buick. Traditionally, women's magazines have drawn most strongly from fragrance and apparel advertisers.

The second issue is also picking up new advertisers such as Mikomoto jewelry and the Spain National Tourist Office. The magazine's July/August issue will be a "soft month" for advertising, but Ms. Magazine says it, too, will carry new advertisers.

Patrick Reilly

'People'

even breaks out its best and worst selling covers. Big sellers: Elvis Presley and Madonna. Worst sellers: Alan Alda and Patrick Duffy.

"Because People can go to press faster than we can, they take advantage of what we call the "dead celebrity index," says Ms. Holton. In fact, Us not only wants cover subjects that are alive, but ones that are young, beautiful and perky. According to Ms. Holton, "We are into giving the reader a positive, intimate look at someone, not an uncovering of their foibles."

Indeed, People was recently chastised by New York Times humor columnist Russell Baker for publishing a recent string of "feel-bad" covers, including model Margaux Hemingway and her recovery from alcoholism, and President Kennedy's affair and mob connections.

However, the occasional "feel-bad" cover hasn't hurt People's newsstand and supermarket sales. For the six months ended December 1987, People sold 1.8 million single copy sales, an 8.8% increase from the same period in 1986.

As for Us, it sold 405,600 single copies, only a 5% increase for the same period in 1986.

"If there is a trend, newsstands sales will tell us about it; we will know about it quickly. The trend [Russell Baker] pointed out won't be forever," says Mr. Elliman. "We've become more news directed [on covers]. Fan covers don't work as well as they used to. One look at our sales numbers tell us fan covers are not necessarily a good idea."

Michele Jones, Working Woman's circulation director, credits the Time Inc. relationship with part of her magazine's success in single-copy sales. The magazine uses the Time Distribution Service to keep issues in high-visibility locations, a prime factor for newsstand sales, she says.

Ms. Jones says perseverance is the key to success. "No matter what product you're trying to sell, the name of the game is to find something that works and then constantly test to see if you can find something better. You can never be satisfied with your results. You always have to get the price up another 50¢, get the term a few issues longer. It's like 'How do you get to Carnegie Hall?'—practice, practice, and just when you think you have a winning combination, you're out there in your next mailing trying to beat it again."

Business

Physically, a greater use of color and bolder covers have made a transformed Business Week into a much more visually appealing magazine. Editorially, the magazine has established several new departments and overhauled old ones.

"The whole theory behind this is that business isn't dull," says Mr. Sheperd.

At Fortune, the arrival of Marshall Loeb as editor in 1986 precipitated a change in the magazine's editorial approach. In fact, the change was more a return to days of old, says Mr. Hayes. "At one point a conscious effort was made to run more stories and shorter stories. Marshall is pushing the magazine back to its roots."

Cover stories—like an article on the Vatican's finances that appeared in Fortune's Dec. 21 issue—highlight what Mr. Hayes describes as the magazine's increased emphasis on international business news. And Fortune claims editorial victory because of the attention it gets in the press. According to Burrelle's Press Clipping Service, Livingston, N.J., Fortune had 23,621 mentions in other publications last year. By comparison, Forbes was quoted 13,246 times, while Business Week was noted 8,830.

Forbes, too, has changed its editorial product. Recent years have seen the addition of marketing and careers coverage, says Editor James Michaels.

One goal at Forbes has been to shed the image of being solely a magazine for investors. "We're always writing for the business generalist," says Mr. Michaels. "But when you're talking to top management, as we are, investing is a part of their world so we cater to that."

Nonetheless, the magazine's attention to companies, moneymakers and losers alike is what attracts many readers. According to Robert Melnick, a 27-year-old New York stock analyst, "Business Week might do a story about 'Company X' telling you why it was taken over. But Forbes would have done a story two months earlier, telling you why 'X' was an attractive company. Fortune might to a sweeping trend story that would include something relevant to Company X or its industry."

Bridal

the product. And if they miss a bride while she's making these buying decisions, they won't have a chance to sell her for another 20 years."

Besides battling for so-called table-top product buyers, companies also compete in the travel and travel-related areas. To compete for these advertisers, both books create special travel-information vehicles geared to newlyweds. These supplement the regular travel sections of each magazine.

Modern Bride publishes an "Official Honeymoon Planning Guide" each year. "It's a mega-page section for us," says Mr. Friedberg. "Then Eastern [Airlines] packages the section as a brochure and sends it to travel agents." The Modern Bride ensignia is on some of these brochures.

Mr. Marion says Bride's follows only Travel & Leisure in the number of travel ad pages it carries. " 'Our World Travel Guide' is our most popular section." This annual feature carries 120 pages of travel destinations, which Bride's repackages as a brochure and distributes to travel agencies, according to Mr. Marion.

Overall, advertising in both books was very healthy in 1987. Ad pages in Bride's totalled 2,476 in 1987, up 18.2% from 1986, according to published reports. Modern Bride had 1,993 pages, up 12.8% from 1986.

"We are number-nine among all publications [in total ad pages]. The only women's magazine we didn't beat was Vogue.," says Mr. Marion.

Future competition between Bride's and Modern Bride will probably be most intense in the area of attracting and servicing advertisers. Competition to boost circulation will be comparatively moderate, according to Mr. Friedberg.

He says that a magazine can't expect to continually offer premiums to push up circulation. "Circulation expands only when there are more brides or more brides with the means to make purchases," says Mr. Friedberg.

As a result, the promotions these magazines undertake regionally with advertisers may become an increasingly important tool for servicing customers, according to Mr. Friedberg. Neither Bride's nor Modern Bride publish regional editions.

In the last two years, for example, Bride's has staged a number of fashion shows at shopping malls. "We work with retailers who carry our advertisers' bridal fashions and produce the events of the winter and summer season," says Mr. Marion.

Modern Bride also employs a staff that travels the country, coordinating bridal events that focus on the gift registry. "These combine fashion shows and vendor demonstrations," says Mr. Friedberg. "For us, the key participants are the table-top people." Modern Bride sponsored 200 such events last year, he says.

Mr. Friedberg and Mr. Marion agree that circulation and ad revenues for the two magazines will probably continue to grow, however, the reasons they give for the increases vary.

"There aren't any more marriages or first marriages than five years ago but our circulation is up. We think it may be a renewal of interest in marriage etiquette," says Mr. Friedberg.

"For health reasons," says Mr. Marion, "more people are conservative and have a relationship with a single person. Then they say, 'Why not get married?' "

Even without these societal trends, both books are expected to enjoy steady growth. According to Mr. Friedberg, "It's not a huge market. But it's nearly problem-proof. Companies know our readers have a buying deadline, so they hit them, and then the next batch comes in. The market is gloriously strong."

'Utne'

Utne has also commissioned Simmons Market Research Bureau, New York, to better profile their readers in product usage. "Utne's kind of a general-interest magazine so you really need the research to sell with advertisers," says Mr. Tronnes. "We're spending about $15,000 on this study to show advertisers [who Utne's readers are]." The results of the study will be available in early summer.

In addition, Utne has set up advertising supplements within its covers. "Off The Newsstand," which runs in every issue, is a showcase for publishers who wish to offer sample copies of their magazine or journal. For $210 per issue, "Newsstand" is "a cost-effective way for publishers to increase their circulation," according to Utne.

The supplement features the publication's cover, a short description of the magazine, subscription costs and frequency. Magazines from American Forests to Harper's advertise in this supplement.

What is unusual about these supplements is that some of the advertisers are considered competitors of the magazine. But, according to Mr. Tronnes, many of the magazines are smaller and specialized, and he has no worries that they might pull subscribers away from Utne.

"It's in our interest for people to read these smaller magazines. We appeal to people who are interested in the different perspectives these kind of magazines offer," he says. "Smorgasbord," published twice a year, is another ad supplement for those companies and organizations offering products, services and ideas. Recent advertisers include Audio Forum and Banana Republic. Ad rates are $350 per issue.

The magazine is getting noticed, says Mr. Tronnes, citing the recent nomination for general excellence for publications under 100,000 circulation by American Society of Magazine Editors. The winner will be announced April 27.

ADVERTISING AGE has switched to a new monitoring system. All data in linage reports will reflect the previous month's advertising.

(X) represents the number of times published each year; publications are monthly unless otherwise specified.

A. Sectional linage included but prorated to circulation of regional editions.

B. Sectional linage included but not prorated to circulation of regional editions.

C. Combined unduplicated regional ads.

All figures represented in this table are supplied by the magazines.

Industry ethics are alive

Coast to coast, survey shows consistent results

When the Advertising Club of New York asked its members to complete a survey on the ethics of certain business practices, ADVERTISING AGE, with the adclub's permission, asked its readers the same questions.

The idea was to compare advertiser, agency, media and "other" responses from the East, Midwest, South and West on issues that ranged from stealing clients to giving payoffs. The 256 replies, tabulated in the accompanying chart, demonstrated that no geographic area is uniquely unethical. Nor was any particular segment of the advertising business noteworthy for its variation from the ethical norm.

Still, there were some interesting differences.

For instance, of all the categories of responses, Eastern advertisers considered more of the business practices to be unethical than any other group (a whopping 68%).

By region, 59% of the Midwest respondents repudiated the scenarios (such as hiring away an account supervisor and his account) as unethical, while 54% in the South condemned them. The disapproval rate in the East was 57%, in the West 58%.

When the results were averaged by profession, 41% of advertisers overall found the scenarios to be ethical.

Forty-four percent of media respondents said the situations were ethical. Ad agencies and "others" fell in between at 43%.

How to explain the position of advertisers? Is it that they simply enjoy the easy high-mindedness that comes from being the boss?

That's impossible to say, but keep in mind that while advertisers don't have to compete for agency dollars, agencies, the media and everyone else must compete for advertiser dollars.

Many business practices, however, such as the one described in Question #1, received fairly universal acceptance.

Most readers agreed that it's ethical to hire away the "Rolavision" account supervisor from XYZ Advertising to help pitch Rolavision's competitor.

Meanwhile, most readers found the practice in Question #2 unethical: They wouldn't pay a $20,000 finder's fee to a friend who recommended their agency to someone seeking an agency.

What if that friend is a consultant being paid by a client and he still asked for a finder's fee? Unethical, said everyone, with advertisers (75%) and respondents from the West (69%) the most against it.

Question #4, which basically wondered whether it's ethical to advertise realistic war toys, received a general go right ahead—though several respondents noted that they personally wouldn't do it.

Westerners and Southerners polarized on this issue, with 63% of Western region respondents approving the war toy pitch, compared with 93% in the South.

Question #12, however, which asked whether it's ethical to advertise food that's cheap because it's "slightly off," got a repulsed and resounding no from almost everyone.

Several readers noted on their returned forms that though they might consider certain practices to be ethical, they personally wouldn't follow them—for business reasons.

Voicing the minority opinion, one reader wrote, "Why not—if the food's not unlawful?"

The majority agreed that the actions in Question #5—examining the competition's materials when received accidently—aren't ethical—and even less ethical in Question #6, which the materials are viewed on the sly. The South was the region most offended by this behavior, with only 3% condoning the action.

Questions #7 and #8 revealed at least as much about sexism as they did about ethics. The first asked whether, when pitching a very narrow-minded client, it was ethical to exclude the most competent account supervisor simply because she's a young woman. Only advertisers found this an ethical decision, with 51% giving it their OK. "Others" found it least (36%) ethical.

Question #8 set forth exactly the same scenario—except that this time the excluded account supervisor was a middle-age black man. Advertisers, agencies and "others" found this scenario even more objectionable.

Only the media (59%) found it more unethical to bypass a woman than a black man (55%).

This pair of questions also highlighted a big regional difference. Southerners were far more likely to find the exclusion of a woman or a black man to be ethical (54%) than their Eastern counterparts, who thoroughly condemned these practices.

Only 34% of the Eastern respondents found excluding a woman ethical, and even fewer (31%) approved of excluding the black executive.

Most respondents didn't object to Question #9, where a new agency employee brings along one of his accounts, though advertisers were the least enthusiastic about this decision.

And, as expected, advertisers were the most upset by the seamy scenario in Question #10, where a friend is sleeping with the secretary of the marketing VP at the airline you're pitching. Half found it ethical, half didn't. The other professions found it less objectionable, and in the East, 59% of the respondents approved.

But almost everyone agreed that the even seamier circumstances in Question #11, where the friend wanted a consulting fee, made the situation completely unethical. It was unanimously condemned among advertisers and Southerners.

Several readers noted that though they might consider certain practices to be ethical, they personally wouldn't follow them—for business reasons.

For instance, one Midwestern agency respondent wrote that he wouldn't hire away another agency's account supervisor who promised to bring along his account because "If he did it to them he might do it to me."

A Pennsylvania graphics agency owner wrote, "As for romancing 'narrow-minded' clients and those who sell 'off food,' the decisions aren't so much unethical as just plain poor business practice. Those clients are quite likely to treat an agency with an equal lack of respect. Why ask for trouble?"#

Breaking down ethics responses

1. You are competing with three other agencies for the Magnasonic Consumer Electronics business. Its chief competitor is Rolavision, handled by XYZ Advertising. XYZ's account supervisor on Rolavision has interviewed with you recently for a job. You hire him, specifically to help with the Magnasonic pitch.

	Ethical	Unethical
Agency	75%	25%
Advertiser	74%	26%
Media	78%	22%
Other	64%	36%

2. A good friend of yours calls and says an associate of his is looking for a new advertising agency. His associate knows little about advertising and has asked for his advice. He offers to recommend your company provided he will be paid a finder's fee of $20,000 if you land the business. You agree.

	Ethical	Unethical
Agency	35%	65%
Advertiser	26%	74%
Media	26%	74%
Other	39%	61%

3. Same as Question 2, but your friend is in the business of consulting for clients looking for new advertising agencies, and he is being paid a fee by his client.

	Ethical	Unethical
Agency	44%	56%
Advertiser	22%	78%
Media	35%	65%
Other	52%	48%

4. Your agency is one of four semifinalists asked to participate in a competition for a new-product assignment from a major toy marketer. While the agency has had experience in marketing to children, this assignment would be your agency's first in the toy category—and with a leading manufacturer. During a final briefing your prospective client discloses that the "new product" is a compatible set of war toys complete with pseudo-ammunition, guns, etc. Your agency decides that it will accept the assignment if it is awarded to them.

	Ethical	Unethical
Agency	75%	25%
Advertiser	86%	14%
Media	73%	27%
Other	88%	12%

5. You and two other agencies are in the final stages of a competition. Part of your pitch has to do with recommending and supporting a new marketing strategy. Late one evening, a few days before the scheduled presentation, you are proofing your slides at a slide supply house. By accident, you are handed a fairly complete set of slides put together for one of your competitors. You have enough time to examine and get the gist of it before returning the set to the supplier, who is embarrassed at his mistake. When you return to the office, you make significant changes in the way your agency presents itself so as to attack your competitor's recommended strategy in a direct and forceful manner without, of course, revealing to anyone that you have information on your competitor's actual recommendations.

	Ethical	Unethical
Agency	46%	54%
Advertiser	44%	56%
Media	48%	52%
Other	37%	63%

6. Same as Question 5, except your competitor's slides are in a file folder on the worktable next to you. You have to wait for the supplier to leave the room before you peek at them.

	Ethical	Unethical
Agency	4%	96%
Advertiser	6%	94%
Media	13%	87%
Other	11%	89%

7. You've been invited to compete for the business of a retail chain that has headquarters in the Southeast. The chain is run autocratically by its 75-year-old founder. Every member of his senior management team is white, male and more than 40 years old. In past discussions, you've come away with a clear impression that they are narrow-minded, too. As it happens, a few months ago your agency lost the business of a large New York retail chain. You did excellent work for the chain, and the account supervisor who knows all about the business still works for you but has been without an assignment for more than three months. The problem is, the account supervisor is a 35-year-old woman. You decide not to use her in your presentation.

	Ethical	Unethical
Agency	40%	60%
Advertiser	51%	49%
Media	41%	59%
Other	36%	54%

8. Same as Question 7, except that your account supervisor is male, 45 years old and black. You decide not to include him in the presentation.

	Ethical	Unethical
Agency	38%	62%
Advertiser	49%	51%
Media	45%	55%
Other	31%	69%

9. Your agency is looking to hire a senior account management person. You interview a management supervisor who promises to bring with him one of the accounts he is responsible for at his current agency if you hire him at the salary he is asking. You hire him, and the account comes to you.

	Ethical	Unethical
Agency	84%	16%
Advertiser	63%	37%
Media	87%	13%
Other	73%	27%

10. You and three other agencies are in a competition for a major airline account. As luck would have it, a good friend of yours is sleeping with the secretary for the airline's marketing VP. She's very indiscreet and tells your friend all about the exciting things going back and forth at her company during the review, including the individual views of the members of the airline's agency selection committee. Your friend gives you feedback on all your meetings with the airline.

	Ethical	Unethical
Agency	56%	44%
Advertiser	50%	50%
Media	65%	35%
Other	54%	46%

11. Same as Question 10, except your friend asks for a consulting fee, with a bonus if you get the business.

	Ethical	Unethical
Agency	7%	93%
Advertiser	0%	100%
Media	4%	96%
Other	9%	91%

12. Your agency is being considered by a group of restaurants that offers "good tasting" food at low prices. They ask your company to develop a better "price" story since they will soon be cutting their prices even further. When the agency delves into the reasons why the company can continue to serve the same "good tasting" food at even lower prices, it learns that the group has found a supplier of slightly "off" food. While the food is not yet spoiled, it is close to that stage and requires significant additional seasonings and preservatives. Your agency accepts the assignment.

	Ethical	Unethical
Agency	15%	85%
Advertiser	12%	88%
Media	13%	87%
Other	27%	73%

Court battle: IBM called in for testimony

By GARY LEVIN and JON LAFAYETTE

IBM Corp. executives have been asked to give live testimony this week in the court fight between breakaway agency Lord, Einstein, O'Neill & Partners and WPP Group.

The two other former Lord Geller, Federico, Einstein clients that have moved business to Lord Einstein—WNBC-TV and The New Yorker—also have been subpoenaed for depositions and possibly live testimony for this week's court proceedings.

See Lord Einstein's suit (P. 92) and new WPP buy (P. 93).

In those proceedings, WPP will try to prove the breakaway executives solicited Lord Geller clients before leaving to form the new shop, backed by Young & Rubicam.

Two IBM executives already have filed depositions. On April 22, lawyers took depositions from Darby Coker, who had been advertising director for IBM's Information Systems group before being transferred in February, and John King, director of advertising operations for IBM Corporate Advertising Programs.

This marks the first time clients have been drawn directly into proceedings of the most controversial court case to hit the agency business in more than 30 years.

But the court proceedings haven't discouraged other advertisers from approaching Lord Einstein, as WPP Group Chief Executive Martin Sorrell had hoped.

Saab-Scania of America braved the legal mess last week to move its $25 million-to-$30 million import car account to the new agency, from Ally & Gargano, New York.

Saab became the first Lord Einstein account that wasn't previously at Lord Geller, and it provides a major boost to the fledgling agency.

"It's more than billings and more than a big account," said Lord Einstein Chairman-CEO Richard Lord. "It's [the fact] that weeks after leaving Lord Geller, we have an auto account. And the fact that it's an auto account makes a good statement, because that's been our frustration for the last five years."

He was referring to Ford Motor Co. conflict problems when Lord Geller was owned by J. Walter Thompson Co. and, later, WPP Group, which acquired JWT and Lord Geller last year.

Last week, Lord Einstein filed a countersuit alleging that WPP's Mr. Sorrell "is now out for vengeance." The countersuit charges WPP with "hounding" the breakaway executives and states: "Intimidation—that is what Sorrell's case is all about."

Awards

Creatives defend pursuit of prizes

By JENNIFER PENDLETON

April 4, 1968.

The date is known for the assassination of the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., not the staging of an annual Andy Awards presentation in New York.

But John Noble, at the time a top creative executive at Doyle Dane Bernbach, remembers that date for both reasons. On the day the nation suffered through the death of the civil rights leader, a TV commercial Mr. Noble and his colleagues had created for Volkswagen was up for an Andy Award.

Actor Paul Newman was a presenter at the gala, Mr. Noble recalls, when the shocking news of the Rev. King's murder was announced. The crowd became distraught; many people left.

But not Mr. Noble and his agency associates. "Everybody left the room except us. We were caught up totally in winning that award," he says.

Now president of John Noble Advertising, San Francisco, Mr. Noble is emberrassed at his reaction 20 years ago. But he relates it because it says a lot about the importance agency executives place on winning creative awards.

It's no wonder. In many ways creative awards have become the means by which creative executives—and agencies—build careers and make reputations. They've even damaged some reputations as overzealous individuals or agencies created campaigns solely for the award contests (see related story on Page 94).

For creative people, the rewards can be enormous: from awards flow promotions, money and visibility.

Louisiana ad tax surfaces

BATON ROUGE, LA.—State Rep. John Travis (D., Jackson) last week rocked Louisiana's ad industry by introducing a bill imposing a 4.5% tax on ad services as well as time and space. The legislation was a surprise because of a 1987 law specifically exempting advertising from a services tax. Florida last year enacted a 5% tax on advertising and other services but later repealed it. Louisiana is looking at a services tax to help offset an expected $700 million deficit. Industry sources believe the Legislature will reject the bill. Gov. Charles "Buddy" Roemer in the past has denounced an ad tax. Public hearings are expected after the Legislature's May 3-9 recess.

Northwest: Blame Philip Morris, too

An Advertising Age roundup

It's not just R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. but also rival Philip Morris Cos. that caused Northwest Airlines to pull its no-smoking advertising from Saatchi & Saatchi DFS Compton last week.

Northwest VP-Marketing A.B. "Sky" Magary attributed the move to "continuing and unrelenting pressure" on the airline and the agency in a "vilification campaign" by the two tobacco companies.

Philip Morris applied the most pressure on Northwest, Mr. Magary claimed. He said PM barraged the airline with disruptive phone calls to its reservation system and sent more than 6,900 mailgrams protesting the smoking ban on the airline's flights.

The reassignment of the $5 million no-smoking campaign to Kolesar & Hartwell, Minneapolis, came three weeks after RJR Nabisco pulled Nabisco cookie and candy brands from S&S DFS after the Northwest effort broke.

Northwest said it was trying to spare S&S DFS more pressure by distancing the New York agency from the spots. Mr. Magary said S&S hadn't requested the action but had accepted Northwest's suggestion. "We suggested that perhaps we should do this to solve problems they were facing, but it was our decision," he said.

Asked why Northwest would move the account after S&S already had lost the RJR Nabisco business, Mr. Magary hinted a Saatchi agency was in danger of losing more business.

Philip Morris could exert pressure on Saatchi-owned Backer Spielvogel Bates, which handles PM cigarettes and its Miller Brewing Co. subsidiary.

BSB executives, however, denied that PM had expressed any discomfort with the agency because of the Northwest campaign.

"We are extremely disappointed that a reactionary faction of the tobacco industry continues to put literally dozens of Saatchi & Saatchi professional careers in jeopardy," Mr. Magary said in the airline's official statement.

Mr. Magary said Northwest will continue to use the spots developed by S&S DFS. Kolesar & Hartwell, which handles the airline's trade and cargo advertising, will handle further media buying and any new commercials.

Sources said it was unlikely that Northwest's move would placate RJR Nabisco and open the door to a reconciliation with Saatchi. Some observers believe RJR Nabisco will keep up the pressure on the ageney until all of Northwest's $50 million business is gone from Saatchi & Saatchi. The agency continues to handle some of RJR's international business.

"All I know is that it appears to only be the tip of the iceberg," Mr. Magary said. "If S&S wants to talk about it, it is up to them. It is fair to say the pressure has been continuing and unrelenting."

Sources said RJR could decide as early as this week how it will reassign the brands S&S DFS had handled, including Oreos, Fig Newtons and LifeSavers. Front-runners are said to be agencies already affiliated with RJR: FCB/Leber Katz Partners and Lowe Marschalk. There are reports that LM's parent, Interpublic Group of Cos., is trying to steer some of the business to another one of its agencies, Lintas:Worldwide, as well.

Northwest's Mr. Magary said the mailgrams he had seen, sent to employees and suppliers, were at the urging of "top management at Philip Morris." The mailgrams were signed by PM USA President Frank Resnick.

PM declined to comment on Northwest's accusations.#

Gillette sharpens its global strategy

By PATRICK McGEEHAN

ANDOVER, MASS.—Beleaguered Gillette Co., which so far has survived attacks on its independence, is planning a new global marketing strategy for many of its products.

The first new global product, launched simultaneously in North America and western Europe, will be a "revolutionary" shaving system, said Derwyn Phillips, vice chairman, Gillette North Atlantic, speaking at the company's annual meeting last week.

The product, which remains a mystery even though it's been talked about for months (AA, Aug. 24), will be introduced with nearly identical packaging and advertising in all markets.

The launch will take place late next year, followed by rollouts in other markets, probably including Japan and Australia, Mr. Phillips said.

Global marketing is part of what Mr. Phillips described as "our mission to become the premier global marketer of quality, added-value personal-care and personal-use products."

In 1984, Gillette took a hard look at its 800 products in more than 200 countries with an eye toward coordinating its marketing efforts regionally, and then globally. Now international is getting even more scrutiny as the company benefits from the dollar's decline overseas.

Ironically, it was Gillette's strong international capabilities that first made the company an attractive takeover candidate to Revlon Group Chairman Ronald Perelman two years ago.

Now, before Gillette's manage-

Waxenberg to head 'GH'

Hearst shuffles

By PATRICK REILLY

NEW YORK—The top-level shuffle that put Alan Waxenberg in charge of Good Housekeeping last week gives the Hearst Magazines book a publisher with strengths in merchandising and "value-added marketing" at a time of intense ad-rate competion.

A. Waxenberg

Hearst Exec VP-Group Publishing Director Claeys Bahrenburg put former Time Inc. publishing executive Daniel Zucchi in Mr. Waxenberg's former slot as publisher of Hearst's Redbook.

The moves are the first top business-side management changes made by Mr. Bahrenburg since he took over GH, Redbook and five other Hearst titles last July. GH is the biggest title—in ad pages and revenue—reporting to Mr. Bahrenburg.

The shift of Mr. Waxenberg, 53, to GH, replacing Hearst veteran Louis Porterfield, 60, who's retiring, is part of a strategy to resist the ad-rate discounting that has swept the Seven Sisters women's service publishing field.

"Under Alan, Good Housekeeping will get a lot more visibility and articulation of its assets," Mr. Bahrenberg said. "He's strong in the marketing and promotion area.

"It's gotten so competitive that in the next five years there just may be fewer of the Sisters around. With the heavy discounting contin-

Gap Inc. cuts short its foray into 'Trips'

SAN BRUNO, CALIF.—Gap Inc.'s Banana Republic last week folded Trips magazine after publishing only one issue. But the publishing rights could wind up in the hands of another magazine publisher, possibly a foreign one.

A source within Gap said they "expect Gap to sell the magazine should an offer be made."

A story on Trips, which won critical praise for its gritty, freewheeling look at travel and tourism, appears in ADVERTISING AGE's Special Report (Page S-2).

The story went to press before last week's announcement.#

Burger King makes gains in awareness

By SCOTT HUME

The good news for Burger King Corp. is that new agency N W Ayer's controversial "We do it like you'd do it" campaign almost made the top 10 in unaided recall in last month's adWatch survey.

The bad news is that Burger King's share of "first mentions"—the first spots respondents cite when asked which fast-food advertising comes to mind—declined in March compared with the February survey.

To give it its due, Burger King's new advertising finished 11th when the 1,000 adults polled were asked to name the first advertising that came to mind from all they had heard, seen or read in the previous 30 days.

That's much better than in the February survey, when previous agency J. Walter Thompson USA's "Best food for fast times" advertising tied for 35th place in unaided recall.

But after the protracted search for a new agency and after all the hoopla that attended its unveiling of Ayer's creative and its return to the flame-broiling positioning, Burger King certainly hoped for a better, faster reception.

It also hoped for better results when consumers were asked which fast-food advertising they recalled. They couldn't have expected to outpoll McDonald's Corp. No other chain has done that in the six years the monthly adWatch survey has been conducted.

True to form, McDonald's placed first with 45.4% of first mentions in the March survey, compared with 43.5% in February.

New York-based Ayer's "We do it like you'd do it" campaign came to mind first for 12.4% of respondents, compared with a 13.3% share for "Best food" in February. Despite the initial blitz of 60-second commercials that accompanied the campaign's Feb. 29 debut, reaction to the new campaign seems to be "What new campaign?"

Burger King this month already has retooled the effort, kicking it into a higher gear with commercials claiming its Whopper is preferred over McDonald's Big Mac in national taste tests.

Perhaps so, but in national advertising recall tests, Burger King still is No. 2.

Wendy's International's "Hamburger A" campaign remained No. 3 in March with 8.3% of first mentions, compared with a 9% share in February.

What did make the top 10 in unaided recall (in other words, regardless of product category) again last month was political advertising, which rose to the No. 5 spot from No. 10 in February.

Back in the No. 1 slot last month was the California Raisin Advisory Board, whose advertising now has ranked among the 10 best-recalled for 18 consecutive months. February's best-recalled advertising—for Coca-Cola Co.—dropped to the No. 7 spot last month.

AdWatch is a joint project of ADVERTISING AGE and SRI Research Center, Lincoln, Neb. Advertising awareness is measured by asking a nationally projectable sample to name the advertising that first comes to mind overall and in specific product categories.

In another significant change, Apple Computer's advertising suffered its first awareness decline in several months. In March, Apple got 29 [illegible] of first mentions in the computer category, compared with a 32.1% share in February.

Despite the addition of Alan Alda, IBM Corp.'s advertising wasn't a heavy beneficiary of that slippage. Big Blue received 17.7% of first mentions in March, vs. 17.2% in February.

Radio Shack was third with 2.4% last month, compared with 2.6% the previous month.#

Photographer saw role for 'guy in jammies'

B&H ads to change?

By JUDANN DAGNOLI

If you notice some subtle changes in Benson & Hedges advertising, don't think the "For people who like to smoke" campaign is, well, going up in smoke.

The most talked-about cigarette ad campaign in recent years is undergoing some creative reinterpretation.

Denis Piel, the Australian photographer and director who shot most of the pictures used in the 18-month-old campaign created by Wells, Rich, Greene, New York, is no longer working on the account.

Sources close to the campaign said another photographer is taking pictures for client approval.

Mr. Piel won't say why he isn't working on the campaign anymore, but he did say "the direction [of the campaign] is probably changing. . . . We [Mr. Piel and the agency] got to a point where we disagreed. . . . What I was doing and what they wanted was something else."

WRG executives said the campaign is only being "refreshed" with "new pools" of photos and no changes in the B&H ads are under way.

Mr. Piel did shed some light on the mystery behind the photos. When he shot the ads, he had definite roles in mind for each subject. "I tried to give everyone a role or let them create them," he said.

Much of the advertising has been based on how the subjects related to each other. Mr. Piel first cast some, for example, as siblings. But if they interacted better as lovers, that's what they became.

As for the mysterious man in pajamas, the ad that has drawn the most attention, Mr. Piel said his interpretation is that someone sick at home comes out from his bedroom, curious about noise in another room. The noise, he discovers, is his family and friends having brunch.

Cast with models, actors and some "real people," said Mr. Piel, the ads were shot all over, including Aspen, Colo.; Florida; Los Angeles; New York; and San Francisco.

Dick Hopple, WRG Worldwide president, noted that more than one photographer was used for the 35 shots in the campaign, but he refused to name the others.

The agency "never had any intention of shooting with just Piel," Mr. Hopple said, noting that new work will also be shot by more than one photographer.

It's unlikely the ads will change much, since the advertising has achieved its goal: It's being noticed.

The attention-getting campaign represents a turnaround for WRG, which almost lost Philip Morris Cos.' $55 million-plus B&H account in 1986. Back then, brand sales had shrunk by about $100 million, due to an image problem created by an aging consumer base.

WRG held onto the assignment, promising to attract younger, upscale smokers, an enormous challenge in the declining high-quality cigarette segment.

Although PM didn't discuss specific results of the campaign, it's believed the advertising has partly succeeded in that goal.

No one at the agency wanted to interpret the campaign's photographic series, saying its appeal is that people create their own stories behind the pictures. "There is no strict interpretation," Mr. Hopple said.

Mr. Piel said he was contacted two years ago to start the project. Working directly with WRG Chairman-CEO Mary Wells Lawrence, Vice Chairman Charlie Moss and Exec VP-Creative Director Ron Albrecht, he was asked to "explore ideas of when people smoke."

Mr. Piel said he shot his photos with a "Big Chill" effect in mind.#

AA revises report

ADVERTISING AGE's 1988 Agency Income Report will contain a significant change in the way media allocations by the Top 500 agencies are reported. The questionnaire's media breakout section will include a new listing, Sunday Magazines (Nationally Syndicated & Independent).

AA Editor Fred Danzig said the clarification is designed to remove ambiguities that resulted when only magazine spending and supplement spending breakouts were requested. The ambiguities concerned allocations to Sunday magazines by agencies responding to the questionnaire.#

seriously lacking. Then, after pointing out severe pollution in Rio de Janeiro, the ad agency representing Varig Brazilian Airlines pulled its ads.

One of the touchiest bits of reporting came in CNT's February issue in a report on 22 cruise liners that failed their public health tests. On the list of failures was Royal Viking Line's "Royal Viking Sea." Only seven pages away stood a spread ad from Royal Viking.

Neither Royal Viking nor any other cruise line has pulled its ads, and Mr. Galotti claims "heads of cruise lines heralded what we were doing. It was newsworthy."

T&L's Mr. Berrien says the Royal Viking article should "make advertisers a little nervous." He adds, "I don't see how they will be able to build travel ad pages with their acerbic journalistic approach."

Mr. Galotti justifies Conde Nast's Traveler's hard-headed approach, and takes direct aim at Travel & Leisure and other travel magazines. "We have stirred things up and elevated the level of travel publishing," says Mr. Galotti. "I've watched the competition, and we've raised the expertise."

But Travel & Leisure's Mr. Berrien says Conde Nast has nothing on his magazine, and points to Editor Pamela Fiori's recently published reservations about Tahiti as a travelers' paradise.

"She says it's not a paradise but then she moves on. She's objective without trashing the place," says Mr. Berrien. "We haven't been looking at the travel world with rose-colored glasses. We wouldn't have survived this long if we were snowing people." ■ ad programs together. We even do our own video productions. We produced 140 videos for Travel Channel clients last year."

The Travel Channel produces anything an advertiser might need to promote its product, be it a travelogue or in-studio commercial. Production costs for a three-to-five minute video are about $10,000, while ad rates vary between $300 to $950, depending on daypart and length of commercial. Two-minute videos can cost as much as $1,900 to air during prime time.

Latest advertisers to sign on include MasterCard International, Japan Air Lines, Sears, Roebuck & Co. for its Discover Card, and Walt Disney World Co.

The next step, according to Mr. Browsh, is to improve the programming. It currently programs a mix of travel information and entertainment shows with offers of travel bargains.

"We won't get something like 'National Geographic' but we'd like to do things like that," Mr. Browsh says. ■

STATION BREAKS

■ First quarter figures end any speculation about the value of Hallmark Cards' decision to get into Spanish-language broadcasting.

Sales revenue at Univision Station Group was up more than 20% in first quarter, 1988, "performing as we had predicted," said Bill Stiles, who is managing Univision Holdings while the pieces of the acquisition fall into place.

"To be honest, we do not have our hands completely around the network yet in terms of monitoring expenses and revenues, but we expect it to be close to that [20%] figure as well," he said.

The network also has boosted its penetration to 83% of U.S. Hispanic households by adding three affiliates in Mexican border markets.

XEWT, Tijuana; XHBC, Mexicali, and XHAB, Matamoros—the network's first VHF affiliates—reach San Diego; Yuma, Ariz., and McAllen-Brownsville, Texas, respectively. The stations will carry 32½ hours of network programming and add 317,500 Mexican households to Univision's almost 4.7 million U.S. household coverage.

■ Telemundo Group keeps racking up new affiliates. Having closed its acquisition of KTMD-TV, Houston, the network should have an Albuquerque affiliate by June, one in Dallas by November and another in San Antonio by yearend.

■ Katz Hispanic Radio has performed the first analysis of radio station formats. Based on the 81 stations rated by Arbitron last fall, the leading format is contemporary international hits, featured on 43% of stations. Ranchera/nortena follows with 19%, ranchera/contemporary with 12%, top 40 Spanish with 9% and Spanish news/contemporary music with 5%.

Ranchera/nortena pulled the highest listening time among adults, however, with an average of 24½ hours weekly. Contemporary international hits followed with 23¼ hours, top 40 Spanish with almost 21½ hours, ranchera/contemporary and Spanish news/talk with almost 13¼ hours, and Chicano news/contemporary music with 12⅓ hours.

■ Cinco de Mayo, celebrating Mexico's independence from France, is less than two weeks away and the Los Angeles TV stations are designing local events to win attendees and attract sponsors.

"This isn't centralized like [Miami's] Calle Ocho. There will probably be about 20 separate celebrations spread out all over the city," said Jon Yasuda, national sales manager at KMEX-TV.

On May 1 KMEX will orchestrate a concert in Huntington Park, adding another element to the Macy's-like performing parade it got off the ground last year. It will air the parade live and broadcast the concert a week later when rival KVEA-TV has scheduled its own festivities at Plaza Olvera in downtown Los Angeles. KVEA will engineer civic ceremonies on May 5, followed by entertainment from noon to 10 p.m. on May 7 and 8; a one-hour special will air on May 14 over all Telemundo Group stations.

KVEA is expecting 150,000 attendees over the three days, the same number KMEX expects to attend the parade. Mr. Yasuda projects 75,000 may attend the concert.

For $25,000, KMEX sponsors receive four 30-second spots during parade and concert broadcasts, opening and closing billboards, street signage, sampling booths and mentions in promotional TV, radio and print ads. KVEA is charging $15,000 for sampling sites, stage signage, opening and closing billboards, broadcast spots and a 10-day promotional spot schedule.

KMEX has signed up Amtrak, California Lottery, Carnation Co.'s Evaporated milk, Frito-Lay, Mars Inc.'s Kudos, Pacific Bell and Pet Inc.'s Ac'cent, Old El Paso and Underwood ham. KVEA's national sponsors include AT&T, PepsiCo, Procter & Gamble's Pringle's and Standard Brands Paint Co.

Pepsi is the primary sponsor, said Leticia Garcia, KVEA's manager-advertising and promotions. "They are tying in with the national giveaway of an Oldsmobile and $5,000. The local bottler is going to give away five sets of five prizes."

■ Galavision, Univisa's cable service, broke a new campaign this month to help affiliates boost subscriptions. "It's much slicker, more complete," said Maite Saralegui, director-PR and advertising.

Created in-house, the effort includes print ad slicks, transit and outdoor boards, premium items and point-of-purchase materials that affiliates can customize, and is supported by a national radio campaign.

MARKET TOUR

FRESNO PASSES THE MARKET TEST

Tucked far away from other major Hispanic markets in the center of California, Fresno is finding that isolation is putting it on the map as a major Hispanic test market.

"Fresno really is emerging as a test market," said Isaac Lasky, VP-Hispanic marketing, W.B. Doner & Co, which is using Fresno to test the Mexican-oriented version of Campbell Soup Co.'s Casera product line through its Vlasic Foods subsidiary.

The primary reason is "There's really no impact from other Spanish-language media markets," Mr. Lasky said.

Fresno also skews demographically toward middle America in both the Spanish and general markets. Fresno's 410,300 Hispanics represent national Hispanic education, employment and assimilation levels, said Ray Carrasco, general manager of local KFTV-TV. The market also has an unusually strong retail and business presence for an agricultural market.

In sum, the things that make it a good general test market make it a good Spanish test market.

This thinking has not been lost on KFTV, which created a trade campaign that featured the headline, "Fresno: the great test market."

Fresno's role as a test market has been a business boon. "Before, it didn't amount to anything, and now it's a significant factor for the station," Mr. Carrasco said.

KFTV accommodates test programs by creating merchandising tie-ins with local retailers. The station cooked up an idea for the Casera test, building a studio kitchen and producing a half-hour show that it may syndicate nationally.

Fresno's biggest drawing card may be its affordability. "It gives marketers an opportunity to test at about half the usual price," Mr. Carrasco said. "Media costs run about 40% of the cost of Miami," another popular test market.

Charlie Walsh, senior account exec at Bermudez & Associates, Beverly Hills, Calif., selected Fresno to test Stroh Brewery Co.'s Stroh's beer.

"I don't have anything to say that's not good in terms of your basic advertiser who wants to test any number of product categories," he said.

But a marketer should look at the product carefully to make certain it is testing the segment it wants.

"Fresno is atypical of larger California Hispanic markets in that there's not as great a dependency on Spanish," Mr. Walsh said. "If you look at the phone book, the preponderance of Hispanic surnames is amazing, but they could be third generation. It's more like a Texas market than a California market."

According to Strategy Research Corp., Miami, 30.2% of the Fresno Area of Dominant Influence is Hispanic. Of this group, 50% speak Spanish at home, and 13% are bilingual.

"On first glance, it looks like test-market heaven," Mr. Walsh said. "But it can be disconcerting when you have all those Spanish surnames but not a corresponding percentage of Spanish-dominant Hispanics."

Another factor is Mexican-Americans comprise 95% of the local Hispanic market. Although this helps marketers test products and campaigns geared toward that segment—Mexican-Americans account for 57.6% of U.S. Hispanics—Fresno tests may not represent preferences among Cuban-Americans and Puerto Ricans.

Companies may use this to their advantage. Testing in Fresno should allow Campbell to see how Casera, which has a long history in the Caribbean, will be received by Mexican-Americans.

To what degree Fresno's test-market qualities translate into a bigger picture depend on the product category and the targeted Hispanic segment.

Despite his reservations, Mr. Walsh said the Stroh's test achieved its objectives. "Fresno has a lot of positive attributes, and we got a good read," he said. "But I'd certainly look at it closely in the future."

■ Other findings of Strategy Research Corp.'s analysis of the San Antonio ADI (AA, March 28), show Hispanics total 943,000, or 48.4% of the population—a 6% increase in the number of Hispanics since 1987. The 254,400 Hispanic households represent $4.6 billion in buying power.

Corrections: Sosa & Associates handles Coca-Cola Co.; Univision's San Antonio affiliate is KWEX-TV (AA, March 28, P. 50).

Success is spoken here—but only in Spanish

The results were too good to be believed.

While Stroh Brewery Co.'s "Stroh's is spoken here" campaign was taking a beating in the general market, the company's Spanish-language test in Fresno was ringing up solid gains in both brand and advertising awareness.

"The numbers were so good, we sent them back to research to have them rechecked," said Bonnie Garcia, Stroh's national manager-Hispanic market development.

"The Spanish executions translated into better audience recall, while the mainstream campaign did not," said Ed Benfield, the brewer's director-marketing research. "We had a serious recall problem on the Anglo campaign."

Specifically, the Bermudez & Associates-created Spanish-language campaign, which used the same theme as the Lowe Marschalk-created general-market effort, boosted unaided brand awareness by 15.6 points and unaided ad awareness by 13 points.

It would have been hard to drop, however. "We started at about zero," Ms. Garcia said.

DRIVING HOME A POINT ABOUT ADS

Univision has released its full R.L. Polk & Co.-conducted report on "Spanish USA's New Car & Truck Market—1987 Model Year" (AA, Jan. 25).

Hispanics spent $5.6 billion on 1987 cars and trucks, up 7.7% from the 1986 model year.

All domestic car makes—with the exception of Ford division, which rose a respectable 1.2 share points—suffered share losses from 1986 to 1987. Ford has been the only domestic nameplate to carry a consistent Spanish-language network TV schedule from year to year.

Buick division dropped its campaign about a year ago and fell off the Top 10 list. Chevrolet division's last network buy ended in December 1986; it tumbled 2½ share points. Oldsmobile reduced its activity from network to spot; it lost 2 share points.

The domestic to watch, said Peter Tate, Univision's Detroit-based sales manager, is Lincoln-Mercury division, which is sponsoring "Sabado Gigante" throughout 1988. The division is providing Mexican-built Tracers as giveaway prizes on the network's No. 1 rated show.

Tracking Chevrolet also should provide insight on the advertising-sales correlation. The division returned to the small screen today, launching a schedule on Univision sports and general programming.

The imports kicked in as the domestics stalled. Hyundai cruised to an 8.2% share of the Hispanic car market in its first full model year. Nissan was the only import car in the Top 10 list to decline, losing 0.2 share points.

"I think Toyota stuck it to Nissan by being so aggressive last year," said Philip Wilkinson, Univision's West Coast sales manager. "Nissan is doing some dealer group advertising, but it's minimal, while Toyota continues to expand."

■ The debate continues over how to measure Spanish-language radio audiences, centering on the Spanish Radio Advisory Council's recommendations to use telephone surveys. The council, which recently was folded into an Advertising Research Federation subcommittee, included client company and ad agency media execs and Spanish-language radio representatives.

Station owners assailed the guidelines, which were based on the findings of a media-funded SRAC pilot study, at a March ARF subcommittee meeting.

"It's like you went through two years of labor to have a child and then they called it a bastard and didn't want to take the baby home," said one SRAC member.

"No one said let's chuck this thing, just that it was based on questionable data," said Mack Tichenor, president, Tichenor Media Systems.

A good sign is that the two sides are talking.

Station owners specifically charged that recent reports of higher Hispanic phone ownership are based on faulty U.S. Census data.

The owners also say those who do not have phones are less acculturated, more Spanish-language dominant and bigger consumers of Spanish-language media.

"If 30% don't own phones and are spread evenly over all kinds of Hispanics, it wouldn't bother us. But we suspect those who don't have phones have similar demographics and listening habits, which would distort the findings," said Herb Levin, senior VP, WADO-AM.

"SRAC research demonstrates that the phone does not get different kinds of people, it gets different results," countered Abbott Wool, senior VP-media director, Cadwell Davis Partners, and SRAC's former chairman.

The station owners said the SRAC study resampled too few people to effectively compare methodologies.

"It was large enough to act as a directional guide," said Monica Roslow, director-research, Conill Advertising.

The train is leaving the station on May 4 and all would-be citizens had better be on board, advises a recent INS ad.

The follow-up contact indicated a clear discrepancy, but it did not determine which listening level was accurate.

Because some respondents said they were of Puerto Rican origin when interviewed in person and later admitted to being Mexican when resampled via telephone, the SRAC suggested that phone responses tend to be more truthful.

Mr. Tichenor said a question on radio habits could not be compared with one on origin that has legal implications.

"If phone ownership is 80% and those with unlisted phones mirror those with listed numbers and research shows people tell the truth over the phone but not in person, I'll say they're right. But I'm not prepared to do that yet," he said.

Those favoring the phone knock door-to-door as having an interviewer bias, lack of control and density sampling problems. "These things argue against it," said Betty Ann Morse, VP-media research director, D'Arcy Masius Benton & Bowles.

Katz Hispanic Radio compared recent New York radio market surveys and found that in-home-generated cumulative audience levels were 493% and 655% higher than diary and phone-generated levels, respectively.

Numbers like these have made agencies very uncomfortable with the door-to-door survey. But they also rap the other studies.

Tina Williamson, GSD&M's senior VP, associate media director, who said she is not using the door-to-door results, calls the other methodologies erratic. "The bottom line is there is not a believable Spanish radio ratings service today," she said.

Mr. Levin said the New York in-home numbers are believable.

"In a market of 1.8 million Hispanics, it's not hard to believe that 70% are Spanish-dominant and that 70% of them listen to Spanish radio."

Spanish radio executives aren't unilaterally opposed to the findings. Despite having some doubts over the methodology, Eduardo Caballero, president of Caballero Spanish Media, said, "We're taking a big chance by telling people representing Procter & Gamble Co., Bristol-Myers and McDonald's Corp. that we don't agree with their recommendations. The methodology has to be right first for the client."

Meg Bernot, VP, media director, Publicidad Siboney, said she thought the stations would not pursue research that agencies will not accept. "Although we used to think phone-based studies would create problems, based on the pilot study and proprietary studies we feel comfortable with them now."

The approved methodology will become the standard, and all parties are espousing a cautious approach. "If we're going to pay for it and be bound by it, we have every right to ask these questions," Mr. Levin said, a stance no one faults.

The SRAC suggested a door-to-door component be included in any final methodology to answer some of the lingering questions.

"The mixed does have some appeal. But there has got to be acceptance on both sides," Mr. Tichenor said.

■ Illegal aliens have less than two weeks to apply for citizenship under the amnesty program, and Greg Leo, director of congressional and public affairs, Immigration and Naturalization Service, says the department's ad effort is closing strong.

The campaign's second phase, which started Jan. 15, has brought everything together at the local level, he said. Supporting a national Spanish-language TV and radio ad effort, created by La Agencia de Orci & Asociados and tagged "Don't get left behind," INS offices created local outreach programs to spread the word that the program was ending.

Mr. Leo said he will not know if the INS reached its goal of 2 million applications until the program ends; about 1.5 million applications had been received as of early last week.

"We hit a trough around Christmas. But week by week, the numbers of applications are picking up dramatically," he said.

ON THE AIR

■ KVEA-TV, Glendale, Calif., has developed an "Oprah"-like one-hour talk show called "Cara a Cara" and hosted by news anchor Maria Laria.

"Focus groups indicated that people wanted to see a forum-style program they could participate in," said Bruce Burke, PR coordinator.

The show will appear on Telemundo Group stations in Houston, San Francisco and San Diego; it will air at noon daily, bumping Telemundo's "Dia a Dia" to 5 p.m.

Telemundo is being more flexible in scheduling, having tried and discarded programming blocks that pushed West Coast programming out of traditional time slots. "They did best when they counterprogrammed their movie against our novela," said Danny Villanueva, KMEX-TV general manager.

"We moved 'Dia a Dia' because it seemed like a good counterprogramming move and a good news lead-in," said Don Raider, Telemundo's exec VP-chief operating officer. "We're checkerboarding primarily music and variety shows in New York and Miami and returning the movie to West Coast stations in the time slot that worked best for them."

The experimentation was caused in part by a paucity of movies. That should change shortly as the network just made a deal with Madera Films, and is close to signing another with an unnamed supplier.

The network also signed a deal for two novela projects with Televisa—the programming arm of Univisa, Univision's former parent company—and has held discussions with Barry & Enright/Paloma for game shows and possibly two comedy strips.

"The suppliers are coming out of the woodwork," Mr. Raider said.

■ Univision does its Bert Parks' impersonation, following its April 17 airing of the Miss Venezuela beauty pageant with Miss South America on May 22.

The network also introduced two new Mexican-produced sitcoms. "El Doctor Candido Perez" and "Tres Generaciones" are airing at 10:30 p.m. (ET) on Mondays and Fridays, respectively.

Univision's election coverage, "Destino '88," continues with primary contest analysis through June 7—including a pre-primary poll of the crucial June California primary; live coverage of both party conventions, and election night coverage. "Temas y Debates," the network's public affairs program, is featuring seven election-year segments. "Power of the Hispanic Vote," a 30-minute special, also is planned.

A second Teresa Rodriguez special, analyzing acculturation of U.S. Hispanics, will air on May 14.

■ Save the hoorays for Hollywood. Initial attempts by the major networks to tap into the Spanish-speaking audiences seem to have faltered.

ABC canned "Juarez," a one-hour drama series created by Columbia Pictures Television, before it aired. CBS followed suit, pulling "Trial and Error," another Columbia Pictures project after a few episodes.

"Trial and Error," simulcast on Spanish-language radio stations in Los Angeles, Chicago, Houston and San Antonio, never cleared in Miami or New York because CBS insisted stations carry English-language spots.

PRODUCT AND ACCOUNT ACTIVITY

Polaroid Corp., Cambridge, Mass., is about to heighten its exposure in the Hispanic market.

After conducting a flurry of focus groups, the company is ready to "run before we walk," said Fil Fernandez, marketing program manager-Hispanic marketing. "Rather than spend endless months devising a marketing plan, we decided we had better implement things.

"Our main intent is to reintroduce Polaroid to them because many are not aware of the new technology," he says. "Ideally we want every Hispanic to hold a Polaroid and see the difference in quality."

Polaroid has joined with Procter & Gamble's Pampers in a "cutest baby" promotion, where each parent receives a Polaroid proof. It also will sponsor a segment on Univision's "Sabado Gigante," beginning in the third quarter. An element of the sponsorship involves a sweepstakes campaign—featuring a grand prize trip to Spain—where families enter by submitting Polaroid photos.

Polaroid will use both the baby promotion and "Sabado" sweepstakes to build a database and begin-direct mail efforts. Spanish-language brochures and point of purchase materials also will be placed at retail.

An image-oriented TV campaign focusing on the quality and benefits of instant photography is scheduled to break this summer. A print component will be placed in Hispanic Business and Vista magazines. Conill Advertising, New York, is Polaroid's Hispanic agency.

The company sees the Hispanic market as a strong source of continuing film and accessory sales. "It's a beautiful market for us. Hispanics take more pictures because of larger families, family unity and more celebrations and holidays," Mr. Fernandez said. "They also really respond to the product's simplicity and instant gratification."

■ E&J Gallo Winery, Modesto, Calif., is testing two commercials for its Bartles & Jaymes coolers in a limited number of markets as part of a pilot project. "It is premature to say we're introducing the product to the national market," said a company source. Marti, Flores, Prieto & Wachtel, San Juan, Puerto Rico, handles.

■ S.C. Johnson & Son, Racine, Wis., is bringing Future floor wax into the Miami market in what is being called a "mini-rollout." Effort is backed by TV, radio and promotions created by San Jose & Associates, Chicago.

■ G. Heileman Brewing Co., La Crosse, Wis., which is moving to shore up its regional brands, has assigned Hispanic marketing responsibility for Lone Star Beer to Montemayor & Asociados, San Antonio. A radio and outdoor campaign breaks this week in Corpus Christi, San Antonio and the Rio Grande Valley.

■ AVCO Finance, Irvine, Calif., named The Hispanic Group, Culver City, its first Hispanic agency. Concentrating first on Southern California, the effort will involve direct mail and broadcast ads.

■ Roundup: Pace Foods named Marketing Mercadeo its first Hispanic agency of record for its picante sauce; Toyota Motor Sales USA to Conill Advertising as first Hispanic agency of record (AA, April 11). Fantastic Sam's assignment to La Agencia de Orci (AA, April 18).

Burnett stars again

By SCOTT HUME

CHICAGO—Recently a panel of creative directors here was asked what they were seeing that they thought encouraging.

"The work and the creative ferment at Leo Burnett," said Tatham-Laird & Kudner Senior Partner Neil Vanover. "It's surprising to see how much life there can be at an agency that old, that big and with clients that large."

Others on the panel echoed the sentiment, suggesting that Burnett's example meant there was no excuse for any other agency not to produce great work.

It was a surprising consensus, even here, where Leo Burnett USA's $1.55 billion in 1987 billings—three times that of the next largest shop—commands enormous respect.

But here and elsewhere, respect for Burnett's financial success hasn't always been accompanied by equal respect for its creative product.

That changed last year, and the editors of ADVERTISING AGE have recognized the change by naming Leo Burnett Co. as Agency of the Year for 1987, its second such honor.

The agency received the award April 26 at the AD AGE Awards Dinner at the Chicago Hilton & Towers.

The awards gala, hosted by comedian Jay Leno, also featured winners of best ads in various media, AA's Star Presenter award, best ad music awards, best sales-promotion agency award and the announcement of the

Ad Tax II: Fight moves to Louisiana

By STEVEN W. COLFORD

The ad-tax fight is back, only this time it's in Louisiana.

New legislation introduced in the state resembles the ill-fated Florida tax and could affect national advertising.

Although the bill isn't given good odds for passing, advertising industry groups already have organized opposing forces in the state (AA, April 25).

The proposed legislation would tax creative services as well as media placement and, according to a preliminary analysis by a veteran Baton Rouge lobbyist, would try to tax both national and in-state advertising.

C.J. Blache, the lobbyist, said national advertising would be affected because of the bill's reference to a "state sales and use tax on the service of furnishing advertising services, space or time."

A sales tax would apply to in-state advertising, sources say, but a use tax could be applied to advertising originat-

Lintas buys Muir, frustrates Sorrell

NEW YORK—Muir Cornelius Moore has agreed to be bought by Interpublic Group of Cos.' Lintas:Worldwide. It was one of three big independent sales-promotion shops bought by major agencies last week. The Lintas acquisition appeared to be a big disappointment to WPP Group Chief Executive Martin Sorrell, who reportedly sought the $80 million agency because it handles sales promotion for IBM Corp. William Muir, chairman-ceo of MCM, said he decided to accept Interpublic's offer because "they looked on this as more than a financial deal. We look at this as quality going to quality." He added that Interpublic executives were accessible, as opposed to dealing with "someone calling from over Albania in a plane." In other moves, Saatchi & Saatchi Co., London, agreed to buy Creative Displays, Chicago, for a price that could go as high as $7 million. Ketchum Communications, Pittsburgh, acquired William A. Ad spending limps along

An Advertising Age roundup

This was the year ad spending was supposed to soar, right? The Olympics and presidential elections would offset concerns about the economy, right?

Not so far.

Expectations for 1988 have been blindsided up to now by a drastic shortfall in political ad spending, uncertainty in the retail market and changes in banking and on Wall Street. The pessimists have picked up speed.

Characterizing overall ad spending as "a shade disappointing," Charles Crane, a Prudential-Bache Securities analyst, nevertheless believes "it's still early to be making major adjustments in forecasts. The second quarter will

Ford sticks to JWT

Agency has friends in Mexico

By RAYMOND SERAFIN

In what one agency official called a "cliff-hanger," J. Walter Thompson Co. beat off the latest threat to its $5 million-to-$7 million Ford Motor Co. Mexican business last week and now may be in a position to gain some new Ford work in the Asia-Pacific region.

Panamericana/Ogilvy & Mather and Young & Rubicam also pitched for the account, but Doug McClure, Ford corporate advertising and marketing strategy director, said the decision was based on a recommendation by local management.

"Everyone presented well," said William Power, chairman-ceo of Y&R, Detroit, and worldwide director for the agency's Ford accounts. "It's tough when you go into a review where the local management is content with the incumbent. That means you have to win by a knockout."

Patterson moves into ceo post at JWT USA—P. 99

The decision in Mexico ends one of the toughest fights for a major account there in recent years. It took place with every party knowing that in three reviews for Ford Latin American business in recent months, JWT lost the Venezuela and Brazilian business and kept the Argentine account.

One former senior Ford executive in Mexico said the local Ford management was happy with JWT but reviewed others' work on orders from Detroit.

Mr. McClure indicated Ford is considering an agency review in Australia, New Zealand and Taiwan. Taiwan is handled by locally based United Advertising Co.; Australia and New Zealand are handled by DDB Needham Worldwide.

In that context, the realignment of

K/D/P siphons talent from Levine agency to boost N.Y. office

By JON LAFAYETTE

NEW YORK—An award-winning creative team hired away from Levine, Huntley, Schmidt & Beaver will spearhead Los Angeles-based Keye/Donna/Pearlstein's New York invasion.

Tod Seisser, 30, and Jay Taub, 37, senior VPs-creative directors at Levine Huntley, will join K/D/P here on May 16 as vice chairmen-creative directors.

K/D/P has maintained a service office here for its Suzuki of America Automotive Corp. account. The new full-service office, whose location hasn't been decided, will handle creative and media assignments from Suzuki dealer groups and handle the agency's network TV buying in addition to seeking new business. Those assignments will carry total billings of more than $10 million, K/D/P said.

The 19-year-old, $80 million agency becomes the third major West Coast shop to journey East in recent years, following in the footsteps of Chiat/Day, Venice, Calif., and Hal Riney & Partners, San Francisco.

President-CEO Leonard Pearlstein said he planned to spend half his time in the New York office and expected Chairman Paul Keye also to spend a good amount of time here. Mr. Pearlstein plans to send some Los Angeles staffers to New York immediately to help set up shop. The agency will also be seeking a key account-service executive.

Mr. Pearlstein said K/D/P didn't need to open a New York office. "It was a matter of opportunity," he said. "As competitive as New York can be, and as difficult as it can be, there is still a shortage of terrific work, and we know how to do some of that."

Allan Beaver, Levine Huntley vice chairman-director of creative services, said he expected to hire replacements for Messrs. Seisser and Taub in the next few weeks. "I wish them well," Mr. Beaver said. "You can't keep good people forever."

Messrs. Seisser and Taub joined Levine Huntley in 1983 from Della Femina, Travisano & Partners. At Levine Huntley, they created campaigns for Citizen Watch Co. of America, Guinness Import Co.'s Kronenbourg beer, Maidenform and Seagram Chateau & Estate Wines' Perrier-Jouet champagne.

"The past five years have been incredibly productive for Tod and me," Mr. Taub said. "The people we worked with made our jobs tremendously special. I'm going to miss them very much."#

Ceo 'super group' meets

Leadership clout

By STEVEN W. COLFORD

A small group of key industry officials are intent on forming a "ceos-only" group to wield their collective clout against government attacks on advertising.

The new, controversial Leadership Council on Advertising Issues, which met for the first time last week in Boca Raton, Fla., shows no sign of backing off in the face of questioning from other industry groups.

K. Roman

R. Brack

The leading doubters, the three ad industry associations, are forming a parallel "super group," the Council for Commercial Freedom, with the same goals.

In Florida, the top corporate executives involved with the Leadership Council developed a sweeping charter to combat ad bans, ad taxes and other threats to advertising.

The Leadership Council will "outline strategy and mobilize all appropriate resources necessary to affect any advertising issue of principle at all levels of government."

The names attached to the Leadership Council mission statement were those of Ogilvy Group Vice Chairman Ken Roman, Time Inc. Magazine Group President Reginald Brack and General Foods Corp. Chairman-CEO Philip Smith.

About two dozen people are estimated to have attended the Florida meeting; the group included top executives from American Express Co., Leo Burnett Co., Mars Inc. and Jos. E. Seagram & Sons.

Procter & Gamble Co. Chairman John Smale, an early supporter of the Leadership Council, wasn't present, meeting participants said, nor was any other P&G executive.

The turnout was less than some insiders had expected, and there was speculation that attendance had been dampened by news stories highlighting the involvement of tobacco giant Philip Morris Cos. and the chilly reaction to the Leadership Council by other ad industry association executives.

One attendee said the Leadership Council "seems to have a strong strategic thrust and power behind it that the others don't—ceos."

Ad taxes and bans were priority concerns at the meeting, said attendees, who agreed to speak on condition of anonymity.

But the group also discussed the fear that Congress might examine the tax deductibility of ad costs.

The Leadership Council does have its detractors.

"We'll have to wait and see if there's enough room [for two councils]," said American Advertising Federation President Howard Bell.

Association of National Advertisers President DeWitt Helm Jr. said, "Only time will tell if there is duplication, but in my judgment the answer to that is yes."#

Charges fly

Testimony cites pressure by Sorrell

and GARY LEVIN

NEW YORK—WPP Group Chief Executive Martin Sorrell undermined Lord, Geller, Federico, Einstein by alienating staffers and, indirectly, clients, including IBM Corp., witnesses testified last week.

Defense witnesses in a suit brought by WPP against former Lord Geller executives said last week that Mr. Sorrell's relationship with former Lord Geller Chairman-CEO Richard Lord caused great concern at IBM, by far the agency's most important client.

Those testifying also said Mr. Sorrell's threats to close Lord Geller helped drive some employees to Lord Einstein O'Neill & Partners, the new agency formed by Mr. Lord and five associates who broke away.

Mr. Sorrell is expected to testify this week or next. He earlier gave a deposition to attorneys in the case.

On cross-examination, witnesses refused to support WPP's contentions that client and employees and been solicited before the breakaway. Lord Einstein executives also disputed the allegation that they conspired to hurt LGFE.

The proceedings before acting New York state Supreme Court Judge Herman Cahn will determine the limits of a temporary injunction requested by WPP in advance of a jury trial.

That injunction now prohibits Lord Einstein from accepting more business from past or current Lord Geller clients, and WPP is asking that it be extended. Lord Einstein's lawyers and one client acknowledged that the order is hurting.

"There may come a time when we'll ask the judge to lift the stay," said Thomas Schwarz of Skadden, Arps, Slate, Meagher & Flom. The stay "serves no purpose because [the

Lost: 150 agency jobs at 10 largest U.S. shops

By JON LAFAYETTE
and GARY LEVIN

There's no sign of relief in the big squeeze on jobs at the nation's largest ad agencies.

Seven of the 10 largest U.S. agency employers trimmed a combined 504 positions last fall and winter, according to an ADVERTISING AGE survey of employment trends.

The total jobs increase reported by the other three agencies—Leo Burnett USA; Foote, Cone & Belding; and McCann-Erickson Worldwide—was 354.

The changes represent the effects of won and lost accounts; the closing, purchase or sale of offices; and the trend toward leaner staffing.

The pace of job cutbacks slowed to a net drop of 150 positions in the fall-winter period compared with a decline of 1,041 posts in the first three quarters of 1987.

Kenneth Olshan, chairman of Wells, Rich, Greene/Worldwide, said he doesn't think agency employment will expand for quite a while.

JOB WATCH

"It's all in the hands of the clients," Mr. Olshan said. "A lot depends on the billings and the commission rate."

Saatchi & Saatchi DFS reported only minor job cuts but faces the prospect of about 100 layoffs following the loss of $80 million in Nabisco Brands billings. Agency President Peter McSpadden said he sees the pressure on job rolls continuing.

"Ad spending's not growing while salaries and overhead are," he said. "Everybody's trimmed down."

Even "optimists" are guarded.

At D'Arcy Masius Benton & Bowles, where more than 50 positions were trimmed last fall and winter, Chairman-CEO John Bowen said the downward jobs spiral "may have reached a bottom."

The ratio of employees to revenue is low, he said, adding, "I don't see the ratio going up, but it can't get much lower."

Food marketers find good things come in new packaging

By JULIE LIESSE ERICKSON

Sometimes it's neither the sizzle nor the steak that sells—it's the packaging.

Food marketers are discovering that innovative new packaging can not only boost product sales by appealing to consumers but can do away with the need for paying store slotting allowances by also capturing retailers' interest.

Significantly, some marketers have decided against passing along the cost of packaging "gimmickry" to consumers, but to write it off as part of marketing and promotional expenses.

"With advertising getting more expensive and shelf space scarce, you can get a lot for the buck out of a packaging change like this," said Richard Gerstman, of Gerstman & Meyers, a New York-based package designer. "One package can offer a competitive

Curtis pushes Finesse with $50M restage

By LAURIE FREEMAN

Helene Curtis Industries today reintroduces its 6-year-old Finesse haircare line with an estimated $50 million print, TV and promotional campaign—the largest product restaging in its history.

The budget surpasses the $14 million in advertising and $26 million in promotion Curtis spent last year to introduce Salon Selectives, a salon-style haircare line (AA, March 23, 1987).

The Finesse restaging is aimed at improving the company's leadership position in the highly competitive, mature $3.96 billion category. Curtis is the No. 2 haircare marketer, with a 13.8% share of the shampoo segment and a 23% conditioner share.

Procter & Gamble Co. has 29% of the shampoo market and 16% of conditioners, said Diana Temple, analyst with Salomon Bros.

Saatchi & Saatchi DFS Compton, New York, is handling the two-part Finesse campaign.

Promotion 'carnival' gets serious

By Len Strazewski

Goofy sweepstakes and contests, cheap plastic toys and giveaway deals—a carnival of cheap premiums and incentives—were designed with the hope that they would entice consumers to choose one product over another.

In the last 10 years, industry observers say, the carnival has changed into a war room. Strategic planning and research have replaced hopes and guesses—and most promotional programs are no longer unsophisticated—or cheap.

The sales promotion marketplace has grown to more than $100 billion, according to industry estimates, with consumer promotions alone totaling more than $25 billion. Within the consumer promotion category, manufacturers spent about $13.7 billion on sales incentive programs in 1987, according to a survey conducted by Incentive Marketing magazine, up 6.4% from 1986. The publication predicts a 8.6% increase this year.

As competition for consumer attention continues to grow, sales promotion experts confirm that manufacturers are spending more on incentives and other promotional activities, but are spending more carefully. They are replacing national promotions with regional campaigns and eliminating toys and gimmicks in favor of "value-added" premiums and product items that reflect the quality of the promoted products.

"Marketers are not just buying premiums anymore," explains Joseph P. Flanagan, president-director of sales promotion for Chicago-based Foote, Cone & Belding Communications' Impact division and president of the national Council of Sales Promotion Agencies. "Everyone is thinking more strategically, targeting promotions to specific consumer audiences and developing more sophisticated strategies."

Sales promotion budgets are up 10% to 12% this year, he says, and companies are demanding more expertise from their sales promotion agencies and expecting their promotional agencies to work with their general agencies in a consolidated marketing effort. However, trade promotion spending is down as marketers switch their attention to consumer premiums and incentives "where they can see the impact of their dollars," Mr. Flanagan says.

According to the tenth annual Survey of Promotional Practices conducted by Stamford, Conn.-based Donnelley Marketing, a division of Dun & Bradstreet Corp., package-goods marketers spent 25.5% of their 1987 promotional budgets on consumer promotions, up slightly from 1986. Trade promotion spending declined to 39.3% of the whole from 39.8% and media advertising spending increased to 35.2% of the whole from 34.8% in 1986.

The survey showed that most consumer promotion techniques including premium offers, new-product sampling, direct couponing and money-back offers exhibited increases in usage among respondents between 1986 and 1987. Sweepstakes and contests, sales incentive mainstays for many years, seem to be on a serious decline, according to the survey. Sweepstakes fell from 72% in 1986 to 66% in 1987; contests declined from 40% to 38% last year.

"What we are really seeing here is the impact of research and technology," explains Richard Vincent, Donnelley director of marketing services. "Manufacturers are seeking the most lucrative portions of their market and then using the techniques that can specifically reach those consumers. That's where the real battleground is today."

Mr. Vincent says package-goods marketers are beginning to take advantage of the huge consumer databases that his company and others have developed over years of direct mail and total market coverage couponing and sampling.

The Donnelley database, for example, covers more than 79 million households or about 90% of the U.S. consumer market, according to Mr. Vincent.

"By using the database, manufacturers can target promotional activities as closely as they like: to specific ZIP codes, neighborhoods, households or even specific individuals within the households," he says.

As a result, manufacturers are choosing the kinds of promotional activities that work best when targeted well, such as coupons and product sampling.

Mr. Vincent also notes that the availability of good consumer data also has led manufacturers to become more regional in their marketing, focusing their efforts in on specific market areas, or in some cases, specific chains of stores.

"Marketers are now working with store management to develop specific demographic and psychographic profiles of their customers and then building promotions that specifically target those customers," he says.

Jeff McElnea, president of Einson Freeman, Paramus, N.J., agrees. "Manufacturers are beginning to run different promotions for different regions and different kinds of stores, depending upon consumer profiles," he says.

PepsiCo, for example, has three separate concurrent retail promotions handled by Einson Freeman, he says. With Dublin, Calif.-based Lucky Stores, Pepsi is running a promotional cash giveaway game with prizes ranging from $100,000 to free Pepsi. The target is a more general consumer.

Pepsi also is running a promotion with Clearwater, Fla.-based drugstore chain Eckerd Drug Co. that targets fe-

With the Central Islip, New York-based Waldbaum supermarket chain, the soft-drink company is not using a game at all, but cross-promoting with other products and offering weekly specials that include Pepsi.

"Instead of running a single national promotion, marketers are building arsenals of prefabricated promotional events for different types of retailers and regions," Mr. McElnea says.

As part of the emphasis on retail promotion, promotional delivery systems also are changing. More marketers are switching to point-of-purchase promotions and in-store or on-pack couponing, according to a survey by Summary Scan!, a division of the Advertising Checking Bureau in Chicago.

Every corner covered

When the Premium & Incentive Show first opened at the old 71st Regimental Armory at the corner of 34th Street and Park Avenue in New York in 1939, it was the first time promotion exhibitors had gathered in one place. The premiums displayed by no more than 50 exhibitors were largely confined to low-price ad specialties.

The introduction of radio into American homes had popularized sponsor premiums. A listener could send for Texas Ranger western equipment or Irene Weicker "Singing Lady" sheet music. Kids drank Ovaltine from Orphan Annie mugs and listened to Jack Armstrong, the "All-American boy," promote Wheaties.

World War II intervened, but the show—now produced by Thalheim Expositions—was reinstated in 1946 on the same site with 80 exhibitors. By the time the show moved to the site of the old Astor Hotel on Broadway in 1950, the number of exhibitors had tripled.

During the early 1950s, Superman came to TV and sparked a promotion boom. In post-war America advertisers began experimenting with home party systems. Children's premiums reflected changing lifestyles. Wheaties offered license plates and Sealtest offered cartoon characters on cottage cheese glasses.

During the 1960s the use of motivational marketing grew rapidly. In 1961 the show moved to the New York Coliseum where 400 exhibitors displayed a variety of involvement devices. Mobil moved into the premium area and found success running regionally oriented premiums. The use of supermarket register receipts and trade stamps grew in popularity. Esso introduced a game called Tigerino, a variation on an instant-win game. After 25 years at the Coliseum, the number of exhibitors almost quadrupled.

The show moved again when the new Javits Convention Center opened in 1986. Close to 2,000 exhibitors, about 200,000 products and more than 33,000 buyers are expected at this year's golden anniversary show beginning today. According to Jay Thalheim, chairman of Thalheim Expositions, Manhasset, N.Y., almost every name consumer product is represented. "There isn't a company that doesn't utilize an effective incentive program." says Mr. Thalheim. "You can't name a business today that doesn't have some type of incentive program."

promotional activities in stores and major media for marketer clients.

"Manufacturers have come to realize that newspapers have become saturated as a marketing medium," says Summary Scan! Director Kermit Myers. "There are only so many FSIs that can be stuffed into a newspaper before they become lost. As a result, manufacturers are re-examining other media, such as point-of-purchase displays and packaging."

There has been an increased use of packaging as a medium for promotion, Mr. Myers says. "Manufacturers are now taking full advantage of their packaging to entice consumers. On any given day five years ago, Summary Scan! was finding 500 packages in the average grocery store with next-purchase coupons, sweepstakes offers, rebates and other promotions. Now we find more than 1,000. With so many consumers making purchasing decisions after they enter the store, the battle for their attention has intensified."

Mr. Myers also notes a dramatic increase in what he called "real value" incentives, including cents-off coupons, coupons in packaging and product bonus packs (offering more of the promoted product). These kinds of promotions accounted for 47.8% of all in-store promotions, an increase of 40% from 1986 according to the study. Another category of in-store promotion, introducing products as "new and improved," continues to be the most common promotion in stores, but also seems to be on the decline. These dropped from 37.2% of all in-store promotions in 1986 to 28.8% in 1987.

"This decline is significant, particularly in view of the number of new products that are introduced each year," Mr. Myers says. "It could signal an attempt by manufacturers to solve the credibility problem."

Marketers also are making changes at the trade promotion levels. Spurred by the documentable success of consumer promotions, manufacturers are re-evaluating their trade promotion budgets and programs and instituting controls that guarantee that the trade promotion funds translate into consumer incentives.

Although many experts believe that manufacturers are actually cutting back on trade spending and rechanneling the funds directly to chains of retailers, Bob Brown, chief executive officer of SPAR, the trade promotion tracking agency in Tarrytown, N.Y., says trade spending is about the same as previous years—about $20 billion. However, he says manufacturers are putting more restrictions on trade spending and demanding evidence of performance for continued funding.

"In the past, trade promotion was rather simple—discounts off invoice. Then, the savings was supposed to be passed on to consumers as a sales incentive," he explains. "But, by even a conservative estimate, at least half of that spending never made it to consumers."

Today, many manufacturers are linking their trade spending to specific marketing programs and demanding performance as measured by increased orders or penetration into new retail outlets, before committing their full budgets.

"Manufacturers are still willing to spend in the trade side, but they want to see the money being used; $10 billion a year is a lot of money to waste," Mr. Brown says.

Food Marketing Institute show in May and the Consumer Electronics Show in June. The Fuji exhibits also included a sample display—a pre-pack shipper with 60 videocassettes, take-one pad and a header that offered consumers "$20 Free Nestle Candy When You Buy Fuji Videocassettes." Like Fuji, Nestle used sell-sheets to promote the program to its sales force.

Through their combined efforts, Mr. Miller explains, "we managed to place POP in 12,000 outlets. The promotion gave us something different in the marketplace . . . We wanted to create a promotion that would offer real value to consumers. We think a tie-in has a more lingering effect on consumers than rebates, which, in our industry, have become less of a promotion tool and more of a condition of doing business."

A spokesperson for Nestle says the tie-in with Fuji videocassettes provided Nestle with an opportunity to team up with a quality product and extend its association as a theatrical candy to one associated with watching films at home.

Mr. Kallet says the promotion resulted in overwhelming trade acceptance and a level of floor-display placements that was well above average. "Significant redemption levels also indicated strong consumer pick-up," he says.

manager and now senior manager-business planning and development; Peter Hall, Fun With Food assistant marketing manager; and Ed Powderly, senior marketing manager. The initial proposal was presented to Edward Liebzeit, manager of P&G's sales merchandising department.

Fisher-Price executives suggested a tie-in with P&G's Fall Baking Bonanza, an event it runs every fall to promote its Duncan Hines and Crisco products. The focal point of the promotion would be a unique Fisher-Price consumer premium, which would be offered free with proofs of purchase from selected P&G brands.

This custom-made Fun With Food Baking Set, valued at $10 retail, would include Duncan Hines and Crisco toy packages along with cooking utensils, toy cupcakes with removable "frosting," and other colorful items designed to introduce consumers to Fun With Food.

This promotion was launched in September 1987 and ran through November—in time to influence consumers' holiday gift purchases. The Fun With Food Baking Set was offered free by mail to consumers with five proofs of purchase from Crisco and Duncan Hines products, plus $2 postage and handling.

In selecting an appropriate premium, Mr. Davidzik notes, "It was important to promote our product line and build increased awareness of Fun With Food without sacrificing an [item] that a toy retailer could sell. It was also important to provide Procter & Gamble with something special that no one else had."

Included in the baking set box was an in-pack rebate form that consumers could use to save $2 on the purchase of a Fisher-Price top-of-the-line Fun With Food Kitchen Center, or $3 on any four of 18 Fun With Food products (ranging from Bacon & Eggs and Burger Deluxe foods to a Whistling Tea Kettle Set and Golden Glow Toaster Oven).

Consumers were introduced to the promotion through announcements in Quad/Marketing free standing inserts, which reached a circulation of more than 48 million on Sept. 27. The Fun With Food offer was showcased on the insert's front cover, along with another Fisher-Price/P&G tie-in, which offered free Fisher-Price Children's Educational Flash Cards to the first 500,000 consumers who mailed in proofs of purchase from any two Tide, Dawn or Cascade products.

The Fun With Food promotion was further supported by TV spots for Crisco and Duncan Hines that called attention to the Baking Set premium. The TV spots, created by P&G agency N W Ayer, ran September and October.

In addition, Fisher-Price supported its Fun With Food product launch with a multimillion dollar TV campaign created by Backer Spielvogel Bates along with print advertising in women's magazines. In a marketing environment where most toys do not last more than a year or two, Mr. Davidzik says that Fisher-Price aimed to achieve long-term growth in the highly competitive preschool basics category by advertising the Fisher-Price brand name and positioning its food toys and accessories as "realistic, safe, imagination, stimulating and creative."

Fisher-Price introduced the P&G tie-in to the toy trade with an oversize box emblazoned with the words "An offer with strings attached" on the cover. When retailers opened the box, they found a Fisher-Price apron imprinted with the Fun With Food logo. The box also contained a photo of the Fun With Food Gift Set "ingredients" placed on a kitchen table next to actual Crisco and Duncan Hines products.

The trade premium box was delivered with a sample of the consumer premium to toy retailers, whose outlets run from toy supermarkets and mass merchandisers to department, discount, catalog and toy stores.

P&G used the Fisher-Price Fun with Food Kitchen Centers as dealer loaders/in-store sweepstakes prizes to encourage retailers to build large grocery displays. More than 12,000 supermarket displays featured the Fun With Food Kitchen Center.

Fisher-Price's marketing research department reported that after the promotion, awareness of Fisher-Price as a marketer of kitchen toys increased by 18% and awareness of the Fun With Food brand name increased by 15%.

Mr. Davidzik says that all parties involved were pleased with the response. Requests for the free Fun With Food Baking Set premium exceeded original projections by over one-third. The toy trade benefited from additional retail exposure in a high-traffic environment and the chance to encourage consumers to sample the experience of Fun With Food without having to sacrifice actual product sales for the premium promotion.

Thompson rejuvenates diet gum

By PATRICIA WINTERS

Thompson Medical Co. has repackaged and repositioned its oldest diet product, Slim-Mint gum, and next week will break the first new advertising on the brand in 20 years.

The new spot, backed by about $6 million in network TV spending, uses a campy style and the popular 1960s song "Rescue Me."

In the opening scene, a young businesswoman is speaking on the phone in her office when a dessert cart overflowing with cakes appears from out of nowhere. In all the scenes, dieters control themselves with a stick of Slim-Mint.

Grey Advertising, New York, which became a Thompson agency last year, handles.

The campaign is dramatically different from Thompson's longstanding "Control your appetite" campaign for diet-aid leader Dexatrim diet pills.

"The act of taking diet pills involves a serious, rational, somewhat emotional decision," said Kelly Kaplan, Thompson senior product manager. "Gum is a lot less threatening, and we can be a bit more playful."

Ms. Kaplan said the company is considering a print campaign, too.

Thompson also aims to expand its leadership position in the $185 million diet-aid category, which has seen sudden growth and new competition. Thompson holds more than a 50% market share with its Dexatrim and Slim-Fast meal replacement brands.

> "Gum is a lot less threatening [than diet pills], and we can be a bit more playful."

> Thompson Medical Co.

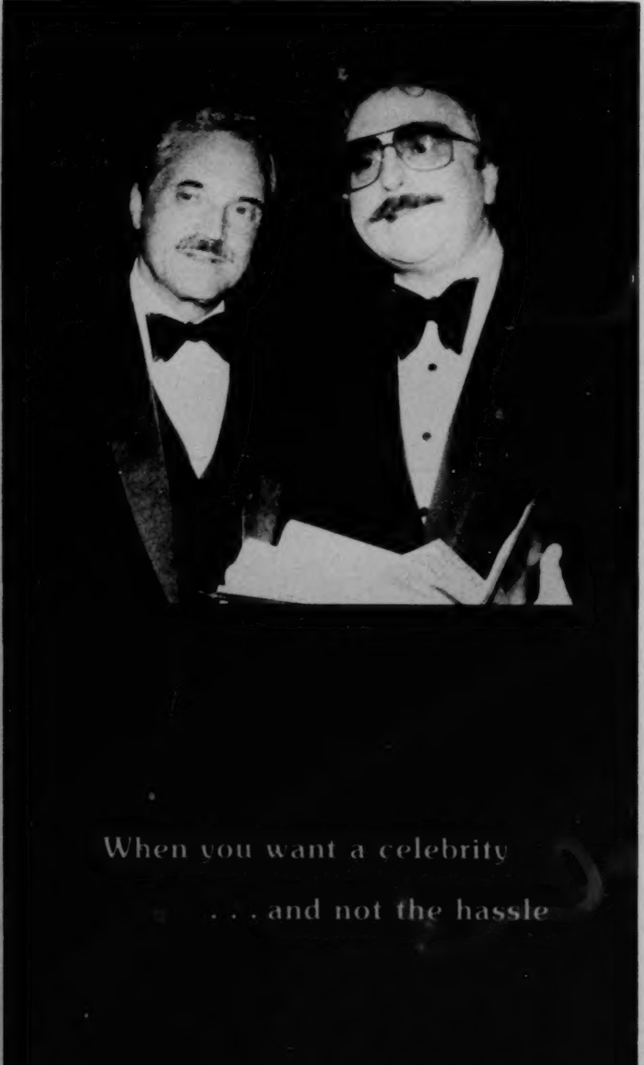
Slim-Mint will compete directly with Plough Inc.'s Stay Trim gum, introduced in August. The unit of Schering-Plough Corp. is backing Stay Trim, which comes in three flavors, with a $12 million campaign from Della Femina, Travisano & Partners.

Stay Trim is said to have gained $5 million to $8 million in sales since January, and Plough says the product "has exceeded its expectations."

Easy and convenient products such as gum and meal replacements are seen as the future of the category, Ms. Kaplan said. For instance, the Slim-Fast meal replacement is so successful that Thompson is considering line extensions.

In addition to new emphasis on Slim-Mint and Slim-Fast, also handled by Grey, Thompson recently began airing new network TV spots for Dexatrim, via Laurence, Charles, Free & Lawson.

The spots still use testimonials from people who have lost weight with Dexatrim, but they also stress a study showing the pills don't cause nervousness or jitters. Ms. Kaplan said that's important since many people don't use diet aids because of negative publicity about drugs like phenylpropanalamine, the active ingredient in Dexatrim.#



Ad jobs

Bowen noted, to staff the newly won Paramount Pictures Corp. and Denny's restaurant accounts.

Agency executives are also concerned that these leaner agencies may not be producing high-quality advertising.

"I think it's having an impact on the work," one agency chief said. The critical test is whether any change in the quality of the advertising produced affects sales.

The number of top 10 agency employers reporting job declines—seven—in the November-to-March period is the same as in a similar AD AGE survey covering job trends during the first nine months of 1987 (AA, Nov. 16).

Reported job count drops were biggest at J. Walter Thompson USA (178), reflecting in part the loss of its $200 million Burger King Corp. account, and Grey Advertising (156), reflecting the sale of the Chicago office to GGK, Basel, Switzerland. They were followed by DMB&B (56); Ogilvy & Mather U.S. (53); Young & Rubicam (50); Bozell, Jacobs, Kenyon & Eckhardt (6); and Saatchi & Saatchi DFS (5).

Reported job count gains were led by Burnett (134), which was followed by McCann (112) and FCB (108).

Moving up in the new survey's rankings are Burnett, to the fourth-largest employer of advertising workers from sixth in last year's survey; McCann, which joined the top 10 in seventh place after its acquisition of Geers Gross, New York, last November; and Saatchi & Saatchi DFS, which moved to ninth from 10th.

Moving down were O&M, to third from second (reflecting in part restated employment figures for 1987); Grey, to fifth from fourth; JWT, to sixth from fifth; and DMB&B to 10th from ninth. DDB Needham Worldwide, which ranked as the ninth-largest pool of advertising and advertising support jobs in last year's survey, fell out of the top 10 based on Jan. 1 job count figures it supplied and AA estimates of subsequent further trims that dropped its job total to about 1,580 in March from 1,705 last October.#

Saturn plans agency pay tied to sales

By RAYMOND SERAFIN and GARY LEVIN

Saturn Corp. officials have asked the three finalists in its $80 million agency review to come up with a compensation package tied to the new automotive company's performance.

That compensation system could then serve as a model for paying agencies working on the entire line of products at parent General Motors Corp.

The finalists—N W Ayer; Hill, Holliday, Connors, Cosmopulos; and Hal Riney & Partners—on April 29 submitted written proposals on compensation and on their organization and staffing of the account.

Those issues originally were to be dealt with during this week's final presentations, but Saturn officials changed their minds and asked for the information beforehand.

Phil Guarascio, GM's corporate director of advertising services and a member of the committee picking the Saturn agency, has been a consistent advocate of tying agency compensation to some measure of performance.

Saturn is charged by GM with finding economical ways to make and market cars.

GM has said it considers Saturn a laboratory for developing new manufacturing and marketing strategies. That suggests that the compensation formula used at Saturn could eventually serve as the basis for paying other agencies.

Initially, agency compensation is expected to be on a retainer basis, because no advertising will run immediately.

Agency officials declined to discuss what they've submitted, citing confidentiality agreements

RJR Nabisco cuts agencies

ATLANTA—RJR Nabisco cut Bozell, Jacobs, Kenyon & Eckhardt, New York, and Tatham-Laird & Kudner, Chicago, from its agency roster in a further consolidation, as it prepares for the reassignment of its $80 million in cookie and candy spending pulled from Saatchi & Saatchi DFS Compton, New York (AA, April 11). BJK&E lost $18 million in Planters peanuts and Canadian cereal assignments; TLK lost about $10 million in business. The shifts are designed to give the company "greater clout" with fewer suppliers. FCB/Leber Katz Partners, New York, and agencies owned by Interpublic Group of Cos. are expected to be the prime beneficiaries of the realignment, said to reward R.J. U.S., foreign buyers sought for McGraw titles

Trade books on block

By PATRICK REILLY

McGraw-Hill Publications Co. is actively seeking both domestic and foreign buyers for some of its trade magazines, industry sources say.

The move comes just two months after the publisher sold off its once-pacesetting Electronics and only weeks after the $712 million acquisition of Diamandis Communications Inc. by France's Hachette SA.

The magazines reportedly on the block are Chemical Engineering, Chemical Week, Modern Plastics, Modern Plastics International and Textile World—all part of McGraw-Hill's Process Industries Group. One source said the plastics books are profitable, the chemical books aren't profitable and the textile book is profitable off and on.

McGraw-Hill executives deliberately packaged the possible sale as a group to include both profitable and unprofitable books.

There's no indication that McGraw-Hill will part with its major trade magazines, such as Architectural Record, Byte and Engineering News-Record; or its consumer business title, Business Week. Those books represent the core of the company's business.

A McGraw-Hill spokeswoman wouldn't comment on whether the company is seeking buyers for some of its magazines.

Electronics was sold in March to VNU Business Publications, the U.S. arm of Dutch publisher Verenigd Bezit VNU.

Two weeks ago, Cahners Publishing Co., owned by British-based Reed International, paid a reported $42 million for Communications/Today Ltd., a North Carolina-based publisher of trade magazines for the furniture and home textile industries.

"The buying activity [in trade publications] is high now," said James Boddorf, exec VP at Veronis, Suhler & Associates and formerly exec VP responsible for acquisitions at McGraw-Hill. "For-

NEW YORK—Lord, Geller, Federico, Einstein took another blow last week when Jean-Claude Kaufmann, senior VP-director of broadcast production, said he will leave for a similar post at Bozell, Jacobs, Kenyon & Eckhardt.

At the same time, two other employees caught in limbo were freed to join Dick Lord's breakaway shop, Lord Einstein O'Neill & Partners.

The two had been prohibited from moving by a temporary restraining order from acting New York state Supreme Court Judge Herman Cahn, but they retained their own counsel to contest that, and Lord Geller then permitted them to leave.

There are no prohibitions placed on Lord Geller people moving to other agencies, however, and Mr. Kaufmann, 44, is the agency's most significant loss of late.

Will they settle?—P. 100

On May 31, he will become BJK&E's director of TV production, a new position. Among other accomplishments, Mr. Kaufmann won a Clio and numerous other awards for his work on Coca-Cola Co.'s commercial starring former football pro "Mean" Joe Greene.

Mr. Kaufmann said his departure was motivated by a desire for a broader role at a larger agency rather than dissatisfaction with the ongoing legal battle at Lord Geller.

"It's an opportunity to go to a place where I feel I can flourish and be involved in making a major effort to improve the creative," he said, adding that Lord Geller has "a limited number of accounts doing TV."

At Lord Geller, Mr. Kaufmann coordinated production of the agency's entire TV and radio commercial output and supervised a 20-

Ayer, Army pursue truce to end battle over account loss

By JANET MEYERS

WASHINGTON—The long and bitter legal battle between N W Ayer and the U.S. Army may soon be over.

Lawyers for both sides confirmed last week that they're trying to negotiate an out-of-court settlement of a lawsuit filed against the Army by Ayer after it lost the Army account in 1986.

The attorneys hope to reach an agreement by May 20. If the case isn't settled by then, Ayer will press the lawsuit in U.S. Claims Court here, Ayer attorneys said.

New York-based Ayer created the successful "Be all you can be" campaign for the Army but lost the account amid Army allegations of misconduct by the agency, including bid rigging and overbilling.

Ayer denies any wrongdoing and claims it was unjustly suspended from government work near the close of the Army review. That effectively barred it from the account.

Ayer's suit, filed in late 1986, seeks the $7 million to $10 million in profits the agency says it would have earned from a new five-year advertising contract granted by the Army.

Young & Rubicam got the contract, but Ayer says it would have won the account review if it hadn't been suspended from doing business with the government.

Ayer's suit also seeks reimbursement of $525,000 in expenses it says it incurred from participating in the review before the agency was suspended.

Attorneys wouldn't disclose possible settlement terms, but Ayer is said to be seeking, among other things, government assurance that it won't take any future legal action against the agency.

The government evidently has been loath to relinquish the freedom to file civil suits at some future date against Ayer, possibly to recover $600,000 in alleged overcharges on the Army account.

If the long-running settlement negotiations reach an impasse and the Ayer lawsuit is pressed, one of the issues will be whether the Army improperly used information from a federal grand jury investigation of Ayer to suspend the agency shortly before the Army granted the new ad contract. The grand jury probe should have been kept secret and separate from the military investigation, Ayer attorneys say.

At the time of Ayer's suspension, the government claimed it had new information about Ayer's alleged misconduct.

Court documents subsequently have disclosed that the U.S. Attorney's office in New York believed the grand jury would indict an Ayer public relations VP for alleged kickbacks.

Neither the grand jury probe nor the military investigation resulted in any indictments, however.

Ironically, the settlement, if reached by May 20, would come only three days before Ayer's 18-month suspension from government work is due to expire.#

States sue U.S. over air-fare ads

By JENNIFER LAWRENCE

Twenty-five state attorneys general filed suit May 6 against the U.S. Department of Transportation, charging a recent order on airline advertising was issued illegally.

The petition against the DOT and Transportation Secretary Jim Burnley was prompted by the March 10 DOT order that exempts airlines from including surcharges in the advertised air-fare total. Surcharge disclosure, however, must be made elsewhere in the ad.

The suit, filed in the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, is the first legal action stemming from the National Association of Attorneys General enforcement guidelines on air-fare advertising.

In the NAAG guidelines, adopted by more than 40 states, surcharges are required to be included in the advertised fare rather than listed separately. This standard is most relevant to international air fares, which usually carry a $23 surcharge listed in a footnote.

Andrea Levine, a New York assistant attorney general, said the NAAG surcharge provision was in line with DOT's standing rule that was in place before the March 10 order modified it.

"The DOT went home and wrote a new order, and that is not how the federal government operates when there's a dramatic change in federal policy," Ms. Levine said. "In my opinion, the order was an effort to prevent states from enforcing the NAAG guidelines."

Further, the DOT order opens the door to a deceptive ad practice by allowing ads to quote a "falsely low price," she said. "It's the big lead banner headline that draws people in. . . . Footnotes are not enough."

The attorneys general lawsuit claims the March 10 order was promulgated illegally because the DOT failed to comply with a law requiring advance publication in the Federal Register and an opportunity for public comment.

On March 2, B. Wayne Vance, DOT general counsel, wrote to seven state attorneys general, saying that states' attempts to regulate fare advertising was pre-empted by federal law. He warned that if states decided to enforce the surcharge provision, "formal legal action" would be considered.

Ironically, the states have struck the first legal blow.

One airline lawyer, who asked not to be named, was surprised by the states' lawsuit because it doesn't directly tackle the issue of federal pre-emption. "It seems the AGs would wait for a better issue than just whether the DOT followed procedure," the lawyer said.#

Cable readies fall attack

Opportunity in net TV setbacks

By WAYNE WALLEY

Los Angeles—Cable TV is amassing a program and promotional arsenal for an all-out, multimillion-dollar assault on the Big 3 TV networks this fall.

Cable executives attending the National Cable Television Association's annual meeting here last week see Hollywood's current union woes and a likely delay of ABC, CBS and NBC's fall season as a timely opportunity to further erode the networks' audience.

CBS already has moved its fall start from Sept. 5 to Nov. 1 or later because of the 9-week-old Writers Guild of America strike (AA, May 2).

A prolonged walkout and the specter of a summer strike against entertainment companies by craft, transportation and unskilled production workers threaten to push this year's new TV season into next year.

The cable industry isn't likely to win the fall ratings war for some time, since cable reaches about 51% of the nation's TV households vs. the broadcast nets' virtual 100% coverage. But cable could make inroads in the ongoing battle for viewers.

"We plan to make sure the American public knows there will be a fall season, and it will be on cable TV," said Greg Moyer, VP-marketing and communications at the Discovery Channel. "We plan to take the lead with other cable networks in identifying our new product and making people aware of the programming. We have a real opportunity to get our product sampled before the Olympics start on NBC."

USA Network plans what could be a multimillion-dollar ad and promotional campaign for the Oct. 3 launch of "Miami Vice" and "Murder, She Wrote" reruns as the foundation of USA's new prime-time schedule.

Turner Broadcasting System has a multimillion-dollar budget to support the planned Oct. 3 launch of Ted Turner's new "super" basic cable channel, Turner Network Television.

ESPN plans a promotional blitz including a National Football League sweepstakes and various other programs for the second year of its NFL coverage.

Other services such as MTV: Music Television and the Learning Channel will have tune-

Achenbaum puts his cards on the table

By CLEVELAND HORTON

Rancho Mirage, Calif.—Consultant Alvin Achenbaum surprised members of the Western States Advertising Agencies Association when he revealed to them for the first time his controversial method for determining agency compensation.

ALVIN ACHENBAUM

Concern about eroding agency commissions dominated informal discussions as senior agency executives convened outside Palm Springs for the association's 38th annual conference.

But when the chairman of Canter, Achenbaum, Associates formally addressed the group, he succeeded in silencing much of the criticism that his New York-based consultancy has endured for its rejection of the once-standard 15% agency commissions.

Recognizing the agency executives as a less-than-friendly audience, Mr. Achenbaum defended himself, saying, "You're going after the wrong culprit."

Agencies, with their cost-conscious clients, have acted to diminish the number of accounts generating the 15% billing com-

JWT keeps 'best' rep

By JOSEPH M. WINSKI

J. Walter Thompson Co. seems to be surviving the management turmoil, ownership change and account losses of the past 18 months with its overall reputation intact.

JWT continues to be named the best agency in the country by company advertising executives polled for Agency Watch, Advertising Age's quarterly survey of agency reputations.

In the latest survey, for the first quarter of 1988, 7.3% of 300 company ad directors answered JWT when asked, "Which ad agency, regardless of size, provides the best overall services and products to its clients?"

That score is a rebound from the agency's slight dip to 5.4% and second place behind Ogilvy & Mather Worldwide in the previous survey, for the third quarter last year.

JWT's latest score is on track with its average quarterly score of 7.4% in 1985, 7.5% in 1986 and 7.7% in 1987. (Last year's figure averages three quarters only, because there was no fourth-quarter survey.)

When respondents were asked which agencies were best in specific characteristics, however, the slippage first noted for JWT in the third quarter of last year (AA, Nov. 16) is still evident.

After consistently ranking first or second with an average score of nearly 6% in marketing, for example, JWT was named best at that by 3.3% in the third quarter last year—and by only 2% in the latest survey.

In the latest survey, the agency

Software systems head for FMI

Calculating markets

By JUDANN DAGNOLI
and JUDITH GRAHAM

The race is on in the food industry to see who's got the best computer software system for micro-marketing.

Several information systems will be displayed this week at the Food Marketing Institute's annual convention in Chicago, including products from such top suppliers as Dun & Bradstreet Corp., Information Resources Inc. and SAMI/Burke. One of the newest is being touted as the food manufacturer's best weapon against spiraling trade promotion costs, including slotting allowances.

Developed by a new company partially funded by General Foods Corp., this software data base gives food-products marketers more control over brand promotion when dealing with retailers, said Tom Morgan, chairman of Market Metrics, which is marketing the system in a joint venture with SAMI/Burke.

The system is said to locate the best individual stores for sampling programs, isolate neighborhoods in local markets for couponing, find regional areas that need beefed-up sales efforts and pinpoint narrow advertising targets.

Welcome to the game of grocery store.

To put your product in play, start at the front door. Pay a slotting fee, trade allowance and provide advertising and merchandising support.

Then—and only then—move to the start square. Follow the aisles until you find the product's category. If it's listed as being hot, you win. Decrease the slotting allowance, ask for an end-aisle display and tell product development to create some line extensions.

If your product is not mentioned, run a coupon in a free standing insert, beef up the ad schedule and consider a trade allowance.

If your product is listed as being cold, offer a 2-for-1 deal or half-price coupon, clear out the inventory. Look at the hot product categories and think about creating a flanker.

Scouts agree: It's hot if it's microwaveable

Fresh items, 1950s Americana, fast-food at retail all to grow

Call them the ultimate shopping animals. But when the folks at New Product News cruise the grocery aisles, they're not looking to fill their larders.

NPN staffers' primary function is to monitor new additions to the food chain. They do this by checking 70 trade publications, scouting free standing inserts and newspaper food sections from 40 markets, performing store checks in test markets and hitting trade shows.

Lynn Dornblaser, Chicago-based NPN's general manager, says one thing is clear for the coming year: "Anything microwaveable will continue to be very hot."

The reason is the microwave is heading for an estimated 80% household penetration by 2000. Last year 66% of homes had one, according to a National Family Opinion study. NPD Group reports that a standard oven was used to prepare only 15% of meals last year; only 47% required a stove top.

A 1987 Campbell Microwave Institute study reported that 50% of respondents wanted a special grocery section devoted to microwaveable products, and 52% wanted their favorite canned items to come in microwaveable packaging. Campbell Marketing Research also predicted that microwaveable-only products would generate $750 million in sales by 1990.

> With 80% of homes expected to have microwaves by 2000, the rush is on for special grocery sections and new packaging for favorite canned items

Microwaves also have become a fixture in the workplace. With penetration estimated at 70%, there has been a big push in zappable lunch products like Dial's Lunch Bucket, Geo. A. Hormel Co.'s Dinty Moore meals and Campbell Soup Co.'s Souper Combo lines, Ms. Dornblaser says.

These product lines along with Del Monte's Vegetable Classics, Hormel's Top Shelf, New Traditions and Dinty Moore brand lines, Campbell's repackaged chunky—and reportedly some red label—soups, and General Foods' Culinova illustrate other industry trends toward microwaveable, shelf stable and refrigerated products.

Retailers and producers are concerned with safety issues—nothing like a case of botulism to blunt sales and destroy consumer confidence.

But with freezer space at a premium and distribution costs that are about one-fourth those of frozen foods, both retailers and manufacturers have obvious interest in cultivating these areas.

"So far, there aren't that many shelf-stable entrees," Ms. Dornblaser says, "but they're real convenient in terms of both distribution and cooking." Hormel's expansion into more West Coast test markets is a sign that consumers are responding, she says.

In the refrigerated area, General Foods is testing its Culinova line, Carnation Co.'s Contadina Fresh Pasta & Cheese is racing to go national and Kraft Inc. will expand its test of the Chillery line of salads with entrees and side dishes. Fresh prepared foods are estimated to command anywhere from 10% to 15% of the $450 billion food market, according to the Food Industry Institute.

"The whole entree area will really grow," Ms. Dornblaser predicts. Although Culinova has been in test in New York for a year, the fact that it just added seven new flavors indicates it is performing well, she says.

"A related area is retailers getting increasingly into fresh-food preparation, and there are predictions they will be a real big competitor for entree and dinner dollars," she says. Although the costs to equip facilities and hire staffs may be high, the profitability is there because consumers will pay a premium for fresh-cooked products.

Foods that remind buyers of mama's home cookin' also are on the upswing. The new "ethnic" foods are dishes reminiscent of 1950s Americana—chili, macaroni and cheese, meat loaf, potatoes, corned beef hash, stews, chicken and biscuits, etc.—served in manhandler-size portions. "This seems to be an offshoot of the cocooning trend," Ms. Dornblaser says.

Some marketers seem to think cocooning will be carried to new extremes, packaging fast-food that can be bought at retail.

J.R. Simplot Co., best known for its frozen potato and vegetable products, is packaging hamburgers, cheeseburgers, french fries and even milk shakes that can be zapped to order in the comfort of one's microwave.

Hormel's New Traditions line also features a hamburger and cheeseburger. And now ConAgra and Golden Valley Microwave Foods will follow with microwaveable frozen french fries.

Related to this is the boom in hand-to-mouth foods, Ms. Dornblaser says. Oscar Mayer's Zappetites and Lunchables, ConAgra's Banquet Hot Bites and Rich Products' frozen, microwaveable french toast sticks exemplify this trend.

She also envisions other microwaveable breakfast and baking products, like Quaker Oats' Aunt Jemima, Campbell's Swanson and Pillsbury's Microwave lines, showing up at retail.

According to Selling Areas Marketing Inc., sales of microwaveable French toast and pancakes boomed 100% to $28.1 million from mid-1986 to mid-1987.

While nutrition-oriented, low-cal products still will pop up, she thinks low-cholesterol products are the next wave. "But because there is a wide variety of choices in health-oriented, reduced-calorie beverages, entrees, side dishes and snacks, consumers are turning toward indulgence. Now they can blow the calories they're saving in other areas on something big."

This indicates companies will be duking it out in the dessert arena. Led by brand extensions from companies like Pepperidge Farm and Haagen-Dazs Co., "anything that's more upscale, richer, chocolatier, gooier, really indulgent will be popular," Ms. Dornblaser says. Now she's talking.

Campbell's Kids busy

It seems Campbell Soup Co. can't keep a lid on new product ideas. The company is far and away the most prolific new product producer.

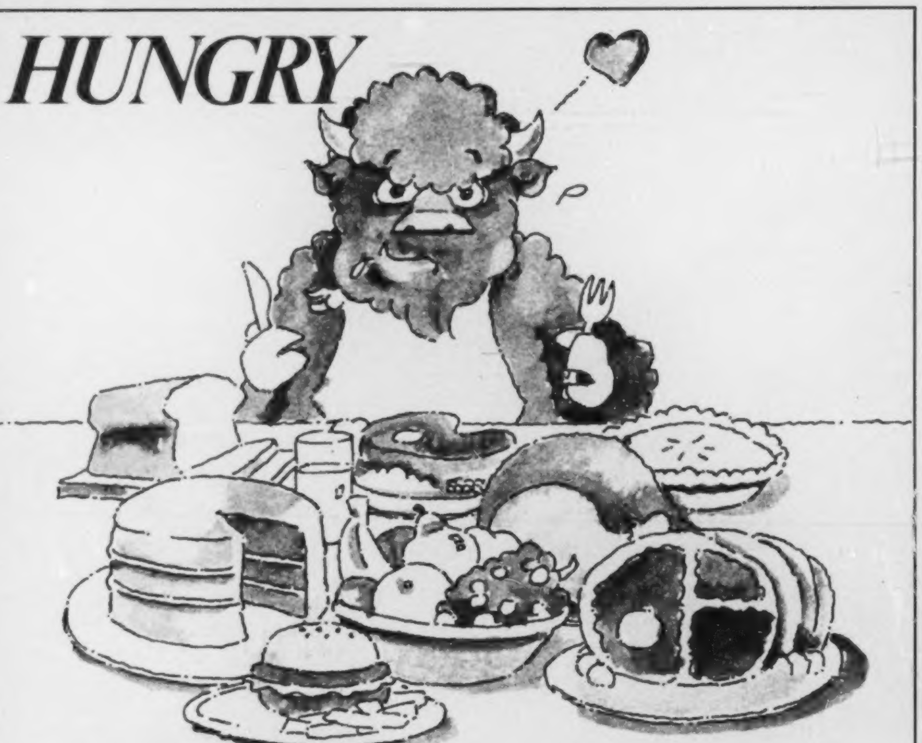
According to New Product News, Campbell has introduced a whopping 354 new food products—defined as any new food entry, including flavors, colors or varieties—in the past three years. Runner-up kudos go to General Foods Corp., which has sent 326 products into distribution during the same time period.

While Campbell was No. 1 last year with 126 product introductions, Kraft Inc. was a close second with 123. They were followed by GF's 119 introductions, and ConAgra, which made a dramatic jump from 47 new products in 1986 to 110 in 1987.

Among the top 20 new product introducers, IC-Pet, Ralston Purina Co. and PepsiCo made the most dramatic cuts from 1986 to 1987.

The top 20 spun out 3,567 new products from 1985 to 1987—225 more than the number put into distribution from 1980 to 1985. The quickened pace is attributed to both internal product development and corporate acquisitions.

An indication of the top 20 generators' impact on the grocery shelves: They accounted for 18.2% of all new product introductions in the past three years.



Buffalonians love to eat! That means grocery and food store expenditures represent a considerable sum of money.

In the two-county CMSA (Erie and Niagara) food store sales for 1986 were an estimated $1.7 billion — proof that this active market loves to eat! The median amount spent for groceries in an average week was $66 per household but 22% of adults in the market live in households that spend in excess of $100 per week.

The Buffalo News is the best way to reach these consumers. Over 655,000 adults in the CMSA read an average daily issue of The News — 759,000 on Sunday. If you want to reach Buffalo's food shoppers, The Buffalo News is the medium to choose.

Dentsu holds off Y&R again

An Advertising Age roundup

The dollar's fall compared with other currencies helped many agencies based outside the U.S. boost their standing in the world's top 50 agency rankings.

According to ADVERTISING AGE's 26th annual foreign agency income survey of 1,000 agencies in 71 countries, Dentsu perhaps benefited the most. The Tokyo-based agency, named AD AGE's International Agency of the Year (see related story on Page 1), kept its spot as the world's largest agency, holding Young & Rubicam down at No. 2 for the second consecutive year.

Dentsu recorded 1987 gross income of $884.5 million on billings of $6.78 billion, up 29.9% and 27.5%, respectively, compared with 1986.

Billings at Dentsu, which also has significant real estate holdings, include about 30% from below-the-line business.

This includes such activities as sales promotion, sports and culture marketing, public relations, exhibits, expositions and market research. Earnings from real estate aren't included in billings figures.

Young & Rubicam remains No. 2 with gross income of $735.5 million and billings of $4.91 billion.

The AD AGE survey is based in U.S. dollars on a historic basis, which has thrown the winning edge back and forth between the U.S. and Japanese giants throughout this decade.

Dentsu benefited from the dollar's 16.1% decline against the yen in 1987.

However, when the 1987 average annual exchange rate for the Japanese yen is applied to the prior year, Dentsu's growth is cut back to 12% in gross income—from 29.9%—and 9.8% in billings, from 27.5%.

From 1973 to 1983, when the dollar was relatively weak, Dentsu ranked as the world's biggest agency.

FOREIGN AGENCY INCOME REPORT 1987

As the dollar gained strength in 1984, Y&R edged out Dentsu by a slim margin—only $11.6 million in gross income.

As the yen continued its slide, Dentsu slipped further to No. 3 in 1985.

Buoyed by the yen's tremendous strength, Dentsu has now held the top spot for two years.

Total non-U.S. gross income in 1987 hit $7.7 billion and billings totaled $54.1 billion. This compares with $6.5 billion in 1986 gross income and $45.1 billion in billings, in constant 1987 dollars.

A constant dollar factors out exchange-rate fluctuations by applying the average annual exchange rates for the current year to the previous year.

These totals exclude Argentina and Brazil for the comparative years because of the extreme fluctuations in currency and inflation rates.

This year, the weak dollar not only aided Japanese agencies but other non-U.S. agencies as well.

Four Japanese agencies exhibited considerable improvement—Hakuhodo moved from No. 12 last year to No. 10; Asatsu from No. 38 to No. 31; Yomiko from No. 41 to No. 34; and Asahi Advertising from No. 45 to No. 38.

French-based Roux, Seguela, Cayzac & Goudard moved up from No. 26 to No. 22, while Swiss-based agency group GGK went from No. 42 to No. 37.

Newcomers to the top 50 also came from outside the U.S. For example, France's BDDP Group and Backer Spielvogel Bates' Australian shop, George Patterson Pty., joined AA's list as Nos. 45 and 46, respectively.

Despite the lower dollar, some U.S.-based agencies did move up—though virtually all the moves came on the strength of their foreign contributions.

BBDO Worldwide climbed from No. 7 last year to No. 5, McCann-Erickson Worldwide moved up one notch from No. 8 to No. 7 and Leo Burnett Co. went up from No. 14 to No. 12.

Not all U.S.-based networks had such luck. D'Arcy Masius Benton & Bowles, which held the No. 10 position last year, dropped one spot.

DDB Needham Worldwide dropped five slots to No. 14 and Foote, Cone & Belding fell four positions to No. 15.

One key factor determining whether a U.S. agency moved up or down in the rankings was its performance in Europe—the fastest-growing region in the world.

For example, in Europe, Y&R grew by more than 34% in gross income and BBDO grew more than 19%, while DDB Needham and FCB grew hardly at all.

In other European results, O&M grew about 25%; McCann-Erickson, 29%; Grey Advertising, 53%; Lintas:Worldwide, 55%; and Burnett, 34%.

Tumultuous describes 1987 at J. Walter Thompson Co. After Martin Sorrell's WPP Group takeover of JWT Group, which prompted several clients to move business out of the agency, JWT moved down from No. 5 to No. 8.

Those maintaining last year's ranking include Saatchi & Saatchi Advertising Worldwide, at No. 3; Backer Spielvogel Bates Worldwide, at No. 4; Ogilvy & Mather Worldwide, at No. 6; and Grey Advertising, at No. 13.

Japan, buttressed by a strong presence on the top 50 chart, led all countries in total gross income with $2.3 billion, up 28.2% from 1986. Comparisons are of the same agencies reporting for both years.

The U.K. maintained its second position with $1.03 billion, up 31.2%.

France, No. 3, was represented by $765.3 million in billings, up 39.3%; No. 4 West Germany had $637.2 million, up 32.2%; and No. 5 Italy tallied $395.7 million, for the biggest growth among the top 10 nations at 47.9%.

Australia came in sixth with $314 million, up 16.4%, for the most "modest" growth among the countries.

That growth, in fact, dropped Australia a notch on the rankings to a fast-charging Italy.

Canada held on to seventh place with $251.2 million, up 24%; Spain continued in eighth at $195.9 million, up 41.7%; and Brazil held down the No. 9 spot with $183.8 million in billings. Sweden remained No. 10 with $158.4 million, up 44%.

Local currency in each of these countries showed gains against the dollar and ranged from a growth in the deutsch mark of 26.6% against the dollar to a 2.6% growth in the Australian dollar.

In the race for billings leadership among agency holding companies, Saatchi & Saatchi PLC again heads the list (see chart, Page 74).

The U.K. holding company—with components including Saatchi, Backer Spielvogel Bates, Dorland and KHBB—claimed gross income of $1.68 billion on billings of $11.36 billion.

This is the second year that Saatchi has topped Interpublic Group of Cos., which is made up of Dailey & Associates, McCann-Erickson, Lintas:Worldwide and 70% of Lowe Marschalk. Interpublic claimed gross income of $992.9 billion on billings of $6.62 billion.

Repeating its 1986 performance, Omnicom Group, holding company for BBDO Worldwide and DDB Needham Worldwide, held on to its No. 3 spot.

The top 10 holding companies are rounded out by WPP Group, Ogilvy Group, Eurocom, WCRS/Belier Group, Lowe Howard-Spink & Bell, Alliance International and Mojo MDA International.#

Notes to individual agency listings

GENERAL NOTES

Exchange rates. All figures in this report are historical, unless otherwise noted. Exchange rates are given in the country tables for 1987 and 1986, respectively. Although the questionnaire sent to agencies requested constant conversion of local currency to U.S. dollars using the 1987 exchange rate, ADVERTISING AGE editors decided to use historical figures rather than allow a weak dollar to unnecessarily inflate foreign agency income.

Also, the exchange rate used for Brazil was changed to 0.0255 from 0.0185 (source: Conjuntura Economica, Sao Paulo), and Hong Kong's rate was changed to 0.1282 from 0.1176.

Abbreviations for equity holdings:
MJ—majority owned, 51% to 100%
MN—minority owned, 1% to 50%
NE—no equity—affiliation or association
NA—not applicable—locally owned
JV—joint venture—50/50

Young & Rubicam does not report billings. Figures listed for Y&R throughout the charts are AA estimates.

HDM-DYR offices in Asia (Japan, Malaysia, Philippines, Singapore, Thailand and China) are in the process of changing their equity situation. Therefore, in the respective country charts, ownership is indicated as NA.

Bowen move portends JWT changes

By GARY LEVIN

NEW YORK—Stephen Bowen Jr.'s relocation to J. Walter Thompson USA's Chicago office is the first of several personnel changes expected at the WPP Group unit. But JWT USA Chairman-CEO James Patterson said he's in a hiring, not a firing, frame of mind.

Mr. Bowen, the 44-year-old president of JWT USA, will move to Chicago, as expected, while keeping his current title (AA, May 2).

Mr. Patterson, the JWT USA chairman who added the ceo title last month, said he'll make unspecified changes—but no major upheavals—in responsibilities of other top JWT staffers. He doesn't expect to make any such changes until next month, at the earliest.

"There will be [changes] as we see ways we can strengthen the operation," Mr. Patterson said. "Moving assignments around a little bit is a possibility, and I'm always open to the possibility to bring in people from outside where they can make a contribution."

Among those executives who could get additional assignments are Donald Sullivan, former exec VP-general manager of JWT's Chicago office, whose current duties as vice chairman include new business; and James Heekin, exec VP-general manager in New York.

S. Bowen

But Mr. Patterson said he's "not interested in deleting" positions.

Mr. Bowen earlier denied any plans to relocate from New York, saying he merely was spending more time than usual in Chicago to hire senior account management staffers. He didn't return phone calls last week seeking comment on his planned move.

"On an overall level, we feel that Steve's move . . . will help us to serve our clients better, because we do have an awful lot of important clients, including multinational companies, who aren't in New York," Mr. Patterson said.

As Chicago-based president of the U.S. agency, Mr. Bowen won't take up the duties of Alan Webb, exec VP-general manager of JWT's Chicago office. Mr. Bowen will become the most senior JWT executive there and is expected to spend more time planning strategy with clients.

Mr. Patterson said Mr. Bowen didn't resist the move, despite rumors—later denied—that the executive would resign rather than be forcibly relocated. "It's always tough to uproot, but that was the extent of it," Mr. Patterson said. "Steve's enough of a team player to do it."

He said the Chicago office has undergone turmoil due to several major account losses and the presence of three general managers in as many years. But he said none of JWT Chicago's clients—which include Kraft, Miller Brewing Co. and Quaker Oats Co.—requested Mr. Bowen's move there.#

Agency profits post big gains for quarter

By GARY LEVIN

NEW YORK—Several publicly held ad agencies reported healthy gains in first-quarter earnings, prompted partly by the continued growth of international revenues.

Earnings reports differed little from analysts' estimates, but encouraging signs of improvement surfaced domestically after what many termed a disappointing 1987.

Although the first quarter is traditionally the weakest of the year for agencies, indications of a banner year haven't surfaced even though domestic agency revenues are up.

"I don't really see any big sign that Olympics and election year have had a significant effect," said James Dougherty, analyst at County Securities. "And I don't think it's going to if we haven't seen it by now."

Among earnings results reported last week, Omnicom Group posted net income of $7.6 million, a 21% gain over the same period a year ago.

It had commission and fee revenues of $205 million for the three months ended March 31, a 16% gain. Domestic revenues were up 13%, but international revenues jumped 22%, which the company attributed to favorable currency exchange rates and 1987 acquisitions.

Ogilvy Group's net income rose 143.7% to $3.5 million, reflecting a "weak" 1987 rather than an extraordinary 1988 thus far.

Its revenues climbed 17.6% in the first quarter to $190 million. Again, foreign growth of 16.7% outpaced domestic gains of 9.3%.

Ogilvy & Mather Worldwide's revenues were up 16.4% to $137.3 million, while those at Scali, McCabe, Sloves grew 22.9% to $22 million.

At Grey Advertising, net income rose 41% to $2 million, on commission and fee revenues of $79.6 million, a 21.5% gain. Grey cautioned that the first quarter's rate of gain "far exceeds what we anticipate for the entire year."

Interpublic Group of Cos. posted net income of $6.7 million, a 21.4% gain, on revenues of $242.8 million, up 19.9% (AA, May 2). Earnings increases were attributed to strong international operations, while both U.S. and foreign revenue growth were strong, the company said.

International gains have come from "reasonably strong" overseas economies and the continued, gradual deregulation of European broadcasting industries, which have created more advertising opportunities, Mr. Dougherty said. Currency rates, while still a factor, are less significant than in 1987, he added.

Foote, Cone & Belding Communications, Chicago, will release its first-quarter earnings early this week. Six-month results from Saatchi & Saatchi Co., London, are expected later this month.#

fell to third for the first time in marketing, tied with Leo Burnett Co. and Ketchum Advertising. O&M was first (named by 3.3% of the respondents) and Bozell, Jacobs, Kenyon & Eckhardt second (2.7%).

JWT has posted similar dips in other attributes. In research, for example, its average score through the second quarter of last year was 7.1%, but its average score in the two subsequent surveys was 4.6%.

The agency's recent scores are also lower than its earlier scores in the four other attributes measured: account execs, creativity, media and top management.

Agency Watch is conducted for AD AGE by SRI Research Center. The research company questions by telephone a random sample of 300 ad directors of companies based in the 20 largest markets and having annual revenue of at least $25 million.

Though more people are questioned in the bigger markets like New York than in smaller markets, Agency Watch is designed as more of a national "grass-roots" survey than one focusing on the biggest advertisers in the biggest markets.

The survey has a maximum sampling error of 5.7 percentage points.

JWT and O&M have ranked either first or second in best-agency polling since Agency Watch began in 1984. O&M was again second in the latest poll, but with its lowest score yet, 5.3%. Burnett was third, named by 4.7% of the respondents.

By market, JWT was strongest in Los Angeles (named best agency by 22% of respondents there) and Atlanta (18%). Young & Rubicam topped the polling in New York, with a score of 13%, vs. 10% each for JWT and O&M.

Burnett was tops in its home city of Chicago (13%) and Minneapolis-St. Paul (12%). BJK&E was named best most often in Dallas-Fort Worth (15%), while Foote, Cone & Belding Communications received the most mentions in San Francisco (20%).

The increased disaffection and uncertainty seen among clients in the third quarter of 1987 also shows up in the latest survey. Only 59%—an Agency Watch low—agreed that ad agencies keep the client first in their day-to-day operations, while 32% disagreed. In the third quarter last year, 67% agreed and 28% disagreed.

As in the third quarter last year, an unusually high number (41%) of ad directors said they didn't know which agency was the most creative or had the best account execs (48%).

For the fourth straight survey period, Hal Riney & Partners was the hottest agency. It was named that by 5% of ad directors in the first quarter. Chiat/Day was second with 4.2%.#

Brainstorm on Saturn

Thomas Shaver (l.), director of marketing services for Saturn Corp., and Bruce MacDonald, VP-director of corporate communications, arrive at Hal Riney & Partners, San Francisco, for a three-hour presentation of strategic positioning for Saturn's import-fighting car. The agency offered a breakfast of smoked salmon, eggs Florentine and fresh fruit, followed by a brainstorming session. Riney is a finalist in the $80 million account review, along with N W Ayer, New York, and Hill, Holliday, Connors, Cosmopulos, Boston. A decision is expected later this month (see related story on Page 91).

'Willow' stirs promo frenzy

Marketers rush film tie-ins

By KATE FITZGERALD and JULIE LIESSE ERICKSON

More than $50 million in marketing tie-ins is riding on George Lucas' new fantasy film "Willow," which opens May 20.

Quaker Oats Co. alone committed $26 million in promotional programs for "Willow," a film about a race of little people, directed by Ron Howard.

Quaker and other marketers, including General Foods, Hunt-Wesson, Kraft, Wendy's International, Tonka toys, Parker Bros. and Random House, are betting "Willow" will approach the success of Mr. Lucas' "Star Wars" and "Raiders of the Lost Ark" instead of duplicating the failure of "Howard the Duck."

Distributor MGM/UA Communications Co.'s media advertising budget for the film is expected to exceed $6 million, handled by Wells, Rich, Greene, Los Angeles. Lucasfilm Ltd. is promising the licensees $20 million in advertising and promotional support from its own in-house operation.

Among the marketing tie-ins, starting as early as next week:

- Quaker is staking most of its summer promotional clout on the magic of "Willow." Its multibrand promotion isn't only unusually large for Quaker but also unusual in its corporate theme.

Although the biggest media budget ties "Willow" into children's cereals such as Cap'n Crunch and Oh!s, Quaker is extending the promotion to adult brands, including Aunt Jemima pancake mix, Rice-A-Roni side dishes and Quaker 100% Natural cereal.

Quaker kicks off the summertime promotion with a June 12 free standing insert including coupons for free milk and a "Willow" spoon-and-dish premium.

A second FSI, on July 10, will offer $6 in coupons plus other "Willow" premiums for

McSpadden leaving Saatchi

New York—Saatchi & Saatchi DFS President-Chief Operating Officer Peter McSpadden is expected to leave the agency in the next few months. Saatchi executives couldn't be reached for comment.

Sears tries out new slogan

Chicago—Sears is testing "Your money's worth and a whole lot more" as a possible replacement for its 5-year-old ad slogan, "There's more for your life at Sears," Crain's Chicago Business reports. Ogilvy & Mather is Sears' national agency.

Pepsi Apparel in trouble

New York—VF Corp. is considering terminating its license to market Pepsi Apparel because of disappointing sales. VF split with BBDO Worldwide, the Pepsi Apparel agency, late last year and hasn't named a successor. Observers say the brand lacks fashion appeal and that the heyday of licensing products as personalities, at least for clothes, may be over.

Chris Whittle: media baron for the 1990s

By PATRICK REILLY

Knoxville, Tenn.—Christopher Whittle has a flair for innovative publishing that causes nightmares for New York magazine moguls, and it's only going to get worse.

That's because the 41-year-old Mr. Whittle aspires to be his generation's dominant publisher, and he's more than a little ways there.

Whittle Communications could be the most active magazine publishing company going. It has about 40 media properties up and running, including magazines, newsletters, videos, wall media (magazines in poster format) and even a syndicated radio program.

It launched 13 properties in 1987 and four so far in 1988. And there are close to 20 development teams working on properties, most of which are set to make their debut in the next 18 months.

"No one today is as successful at launching magazines as we are," Mr. Whittle said. "The mass media no longer deliver the impact or the audience reach for their advertisers the way they once did. With new approaches and new technologies, we found ways to directly target audiences."

Mr. Whittle also has found top-flight talent to help him get

Did Sorrell woo O'Neill?

and GARY LEVIN

NEW YORK—Three weeks after Lord Einstein O'Neill & Partners was formed, WPP Group Chief Executive Martin Sorrell phoned one of the breakaway partners possibly to lure him back to WPP.

The surprising phone call was disclosed in testimony last week by Kevin O'Neill, former exec VP-creative director at Lord, Geller, Federico, Einstein. Mr. Sorrell is suing Lord Einstein executives for leaving the agency, in a case before the New York state Supreme Court.

Mr. O'Neill said Mr. Sorrell called him at the new agency to set up a meeting. Sources speculated that Mr. Sorrell was trying to recruit Mr. O'Neill back into WPP.

"I was shocked he'd called me," testified Mr. O'Neill, who holds the same title at Lord Einstein. "I asked what he wanted to talk about. He said he just wanted to chat about things in general."

Mr. O'Neill said he put off the first request, then turned down a second invitation when Mr. Sorrell called again a few days later. Mr. O'Neill said he didn't know exactly when the call was made, but sources said it happened April 8.

That day, Lord Einstein executives had a meeting scheduled with IBM Corp., Lord Geller's biggest client. IBM decided to assign some project work to the new agency, where Mr. O'Neill, among others, was familiar with IBM's needs and well-regarded by IBM executives.

Earlier, on April 6, Mr. Sorrell announced he had hired Agi Clark from N W Ayer as exec VP-managing director of creative services at Lord Geller, effectively filling the gap left by Mr. O'Neill.

Since Mr. Sorrell couldn't have asked Mr. O'Neill to return to the agency and report to Ms. Clark, he may have had an even more senior post in mind, observers believe. Earlier that week, Lord Geller won a temporary injunction barring Lord Einstein from hiring Lord Geller employees.

It couldn't be determined whether Mr. Sorrell called other Lord Einstein staffers. Former Lord Geller Chairman-CEO Dick Lord, Presi-

Saatchi names pair to oversee agency groups

By LAUREL WENTZ

LONDON—Saatchi & Saatchi Co. is moving two top British executives into major new roles that will have an impact on Saatchi's operations in the U.S. and elsewhere.

The new posts include responsibility for strategic coordination of all Saatchi-owned advertising and other communications businesses.

Terry Bannister, 42, and Roy Warman, 39, were appointed joint directors of operations for Saatchi's communications division last week.

T. Bannister

R. Warman

For the past year, they've been joint ceos of Saatchi & Saatchi Advertising International—the non-U.S. arm of Saatchi & Saatchi Advertising Worldwide.

In that role they wielded enormous clout by starting an agency from scratch in Japan, moving people around and even ordering a creative director fired in West Germany.

However, Saatchi & Saatchi is carefully positioning this latest change to be non-threatening to its U.S. managers, and there's no hint they will directly interfere in the U.S.

Messrs. Bannister and Warman, who were joint managing directors and ceos of Saatchi's London agency from 19[illegible] to 1987, are the most successful example of a Saatchi penchant for tackling top management jobs in pairs.

Their new roles will include making decisions across networks about competitive activities and what represents client conflict; how to communicate the different, competitive positionings of the Saatchi and Backer Spielvogel Bates Worldwide networks, about which Mr. Warman said there is "enormous confusion" in public perception; and integrat-

Banquet is over; Coors favors Draft

By IRA TEINOWITZ

Adolph Coors Co. will hike ad spending for its flagship Coors Banquet beer by 35% and rechristen it Coors Original Draft.

The changes in the 115-year-old brand, expected to occur in July, are intended to counter both growing competition from Miller Brewing Co.'s Genuine Draft and customer confusion about Coors' credentials as a draft beer.

For more than 30 years, Coors has been making all its beer using a cold filtering process that it says produces a true draft beer. Since last November, advertising for Coors—from GSD&M, Austin, Texas—has focused on this heritage, positioning it as the original draft beer (AA, Nov. 23).

But until now, the only packaging the company offered that prominently mentioned its draft-brewing style was for its newest beers, Coors Extra Gold, Herman Joseph's and Herman Joseph's Light.

"They have obviously concluded that being draft will help sell the product," said Emanuel Goldman, a beer analyst for Montgomery Securities. "The ironic thing is that while Coors was the first one to say it didn't pasteurize beer, it was Miller who was able to get the mes-

Colgate says its global plan is running ahead of schedule

By LAURIE FREEMAN

NEW YORK—Trying to improve its standing as a leading global consumer-products company, Colgate-Palmolive Co. is introducing at least two new products internationally: Ajax Spray 'n Wipe and Neutro Balance.

Ajax Spray 'n Wipe, a line of household-cleaning products, is starting TV advertising in Australia, while Neutro Balance, a pH-balanced skincare line, is starting its launch in Latin America. Young & Rubicam handles Neutro Balance; Chicago-based Foote, Cone & Belding is doing the Ajax introduction.

"Our vision is to be the best global consumer-goods company," Colgate-Palmolive Chairman Reuben Mark said. "Our eight-year plan essentially is ahead of schedule on virtually all measurements."

Pausing to evaluate its progress at the midpoint of the eight-year strategic plan, Mr. Mark said the company has met or exceeded all but one of its advertising, marketing and financial goals.

The only area lagging is the company's return on sales, "which has not moved as fast" as expected, Mr. Mark said at Colgate's annual meeting.

He credits Colgate's relationships with FCB and Y&R for much of the company's success.

"We have strengthened our marketing and advertising efforts worldwide . . . based on the creative excellence of our partnership with two world-class agencies," he told shareholders during Colgate's annual meeting that took place here earlier this month.

Mr. Mark showed off the latest commercial reel from the two agencies, touting the "highly competitive" worldwide creative for products ranging from Fab 1 Shot laundry aid to Colgate Tartar-Control Formula toothpaste.

To stay competitive, Mr. Mark said Colgate, which introduced 201 new products and line extensions last year, must divest its Kendall Co. Colgate announced earlier it intends to sell the healthcare unit, which could command a purchase price of more than $1 billion.

Kendall accounted for $1 billion, or 18%, of Colgate's $5.6 billion in sales last year.

"It's imperative [for Colgate] to focus all its attention on the consumer-products area," Mr. Mark said.

The sale of Kendall will give Colgate seed money to invest in new-venture groups in the areas and categories the company wants to be in, said Courtenay Shepard, president, Colgate-U.S.

The goal is to invest in small "product niches" that Colgate's main competitors may not be interested in pursuing, like the company's recent acquisition of Disposer Care, a garbage-disposal deodorizer from Wisconsin Pharmacal (AA, April 25).#

The dancing raisins' best performance is in selling themselves.

Hot raisins

It's licensed products that bring big bucks

By ALICE Z. CUNEO

The California Raisin Advisory Board's dancing raisin commercials are selling a few more edible raisins, but their real success is in moving fruit of the inedible kind.

Retail sales of merchandise bearing the likenesses of the raisin board's Claymation presenters are expected to reach $500 million this year, 50% higher than the board estimated when the bulk of the products were launched in January.

Applause Inc., the board's licensing agent, predicts wholesale sales of raisin merchandise will top $250 million—more than worldwide raisin sales, which are estimated at $200 million.

"We are shellshocked. We knew we had a winner, but we didn't anticipate how hot it would become," said Pamela McSweeney, marketing manager at Applause Inc., Woodland Hills, Calif.

Ms. McSweeney said the company has granted 62 licenses for raisin merchandise so far and is negotiating to add new products in 1989 and 1990.

Licensed products range from $1 trinkets such as pencils and tiny figurines to $25 watches and more expensive bedding sets.

Actual raisin sales, meanwhile, have been less than explosive.

"The commercials obviously drew a lot of attention and amused people, but they did not have outstanding sales results," said Alan Miller, spokesman at Selling Areas-Marketing Inc.

Although spots introducing Will Vinton Productions' Claymation raisins brought the business out of the "soft" summer of 1986, "there isn't any tremendous upsurge in volume," Mr. Miller said.

Dollar sales of raisins were up 6% and pound sales rose 8% for August 1987 through March 1988, compared with the same period a year earlier, said Bob Phinney, the raisin board's director of advertising and promotion. Sales for August 1986, when the Claymation campaign broke, through March 1987 posted similar gains over the 1985-1986 crop year.

But SAMI data indicate supermarket warehouse withdrawals of raisins totaled 151 million pounds in 1986, down 3.1% from 1985. In 1987, raisins moving onto grocery-store shelves increased 1.9% to 154 million pounds. For the first quarter of this year, sales are up only 0.8%.

Those figures don't include the sales of raisins in other products, such as baked goods and breakfast cereals.

One side benefit to the raisin industry of the dancing raisins campaign is the promotion of raisins in other products, Mr. Miller said.

For instance, General Foods Corp. is adding a California raisin to its Post Natural Raisin Bran cereal box and has licensed the characters for a summer ad campaign and consumer promotion (AA, May 2).

Last fall, Del Monte USA used the rockin' raisins to promote Del Monte Fruit Snacks and Del Monte seedless raisins (AA, Aug. 31), and Hardee's Food Systems used the characters for a promotion of its Cinnamon N' Raisin Bisquit (AA, Oct. 5).

Foote, Cone & Belding, San Francisco, handles the raisin board's advertising.

The popularity of the Claymation figures extends to nations such as Australia, which has its own raisin industry and has never aired the California raisin spots, said Applause's Ms. McSweeney.

"We've launched internationally with no media support," she said.#

Marketers need to think long term

Costs still make package-goods companies skittish

By Judith Graham

Direct marketing has yet to come of age at consumer package-goods companies.

"The interest level among package-goods manufacturers is very high, but the commitment is generally low," says Ellen Farley, senior VP-director of research at Donnelley Marketing. "Until some highly visible, successful campaigns are launched, it will be difficult to command the resources needed to staff departments and build data bases."

The recent creation of "category" organizational structures by some package-goods marketers promises to be a strong plus for direct marketing.

"Individual brand managers cannot justify direct marketing's costs. But across brands, it starts to become economically feasible," says John Groman, senior VP at Epsilon Data Management, a data base direct marketing company.

However, organizational changes are not enough to reverse the hesitation toward direct marketing. Several experts suggest that a basic shift toward long-term customer relationships and away from short-term sales will be necessary before they embrace this approach.

"Direct marketing will only flourish when the problem of customer relationships is isolated, identified and put on the top of the corporate agenda," says David Pease, senior VP at Saugatuck Group and former corporate director of direct marketing at General Foods Corp.

Little is known about package-goods companies' involvement in direct marketing. The Direct Marketing Assn. does not collect statistics on the subject, nor are there other sources of centralized information. Package-goods companies like obscurity for their activities.

"We prefer not to disclose very much," says John Kuendig, director-direct marketing at General Foods. "One of the advantages of direct marketing is that you haven't gone on mass media or dropped millions of free standing inserts, and your competition really doesn't know what you're doing," he says.

That gives companies the freedom to make mistakes without losing face. "We're still in the stage of experiment, and at least 50% of the experiments are failures or not clear successes," says William Morrissey, president of Ogilvy & Mather Direct, the nation's largest direct-response agency.

Confusion about what constitutes direct marketing is prevalent among package-goods com-

General Foods believes in Crystal Light effort

Marketer develops direct program to build on strong consumer loyalty to brand

By Amy Zipkin

The analysis of how to reach a finite audience with more personal service is one of our first objectives, says John Kuendig, director of direct marketing for General Foods.

"We've only started to scratch the surface to determine if there are direct-marketing applications to support brand strategies," he says.

General Foods has developed direct-mail programs to consumers with Gevalia coffee and the Thomas Garraway gourmet food catalog. More recently the package-goods giant has begun to develop direct-marketing programs to bring the customer into retail stores.

For a March rollout, General Foods developed a program integrating package-goods promotion with direct marketing for Crystal Light, its adult powdered diet soft-drink mix.

Now in the fifth year of national distribution, Crystal Light's 10 flavors have a strong following among users with a high level of interest in health and fitness.

"Crystal Light drinkers view the brand as their own," says Leslie Benning, senior product manager, Crystal Light.

To capitalize on its strong brand loyalty, GF created a Crystal Light LightStyle Club, which is supported by a national health and fitness campaign from DMB&B, New York, featuring celebrity endorsers Linda Evans and Priscilla Presley. The tag line, "I believe in Crystal Light 'cause I believe in me," emphasizes the close association of consumer and product.

"Basically it's a reward and motivation system to get the customer to continue to purchase the brand," says Ms. Benning.

The Crystal Light mailing list is made up of customers who responded to previous Crystal Light offers. The brand also used Donnelley Marketing's Share Force and Computerized Marketing Technologies' Select and Save programs for additional customer names.

Various offers were tested in a series of mailings during 1987. The offers tested different techniques for the program, such as multi-value coupons vs. single value coupons, says Mr. Kuendig.

(Further information about the testing is not available.)

The rollout, which will expand to quarterly mailings, consists of a blue and white envelope with teaser copy offering savings, health and beauty tips and a catalog.

"The collaborative designs create a whole look that's light, energetic and active," says Ms. Benning.

The package, created by DMB&B Direct, includes a two-page letter describing the contents: a coupon for multiple purchase; an offer for Crystal Light singles; a LightStyle catalog; coupons for free canisters and a savings pocket for foil seals.

The introductory letter signed by Christine Ellis, a fictional club director, also offers the customer two free seals, which can be used to purchase Crystal Light catalog merchandise. "It's a way to personalize the club," says Ms. Benning.

The newsletter continues the blue and white theme and includes health, diet, fitness and beauty information as well as recipes and a description of the nationally televised fourth annual Crystal Light National Aerobic Championship this spring.

The catalog is an eight-panel merchandise brochure featuring action gear with a Crystal Light logo, beverage sets and Long-term thinking

'Individual brand managers cannot justify direct marketing's costs. But across brands, it starts to become economically feasible'

panies, says James Rosenfield, president of his own San Diego, Calif.-based direct-response shop.

Direct marketers aggravate the problem by focusing on techniques instead of concepts and speaking in a language that package-goods managers do not understand, he says.

Until some critical questions are answered, it's likely that direct marketing will remain an occasional weapon used to solve a limited set of problems.

The most important questions relate to bottom lines. Managers aren't convinced that direct-marketing advantages are worth the costs—they can be 10 to 20 times higher (per 1,000 consumers reached) than mass media expenses.

"The issue is whether the margins in soap and kids' cereals can support it. And the truth is we don't know the answer yet," Mr. Morrissey says.

What is clear is that direct-response agencies are more interested than ever in finding the answer.

Executives have responded by organizing a new Direct Marketing Assn. program charged with developing the package-goods marketplace. The Market Development Program, which will be run as a separate DMA department, already has received more than $150,000 in funding.

"Rather than bringing what we already know we do well to package-goods companies, we need to understand their businesses better and create programs that address those problems," says Richard V. Colligan, vice chairman at Wunderman Worldwide and co-chairman of the DMA Market Development Program.

George Wiedemann, the other program co-chairman and president of Grey Direct, believes the future lies in convincing companies that direct marketing should be an ongoing component of their marketing mix.

So far, only major cigarette companies appear to be adopting that approach. During the past several years, both R.J. Reynolds Tobacco USA and Philip Morris USA have spent substantial sums building enormous customer data bases.

Several experts suggest that the marketers are building an alternative distribution network to ensure their survival if retail distribution is cut back.

Direct marketing is "very definitely" growing in importance at RJR, says Kenneth Neher, director, direct marketing development.

Mr. Neher declined to discuss Reynolds' direct marketing program in detail, but observers speculate that its data base has 25 million names, and that its annual direct-marketing budget is more than $100 million.

Philip Morris is not as far along as Reynolds; it began data-base marketing in earnest only three years ago. Most of its activity has been testing different kinds of targeted promotions, says Ellen Merlo, VP-marketing services.

In the view of many experts, direct marketing rewards—additional product information, promotional offers and general information that addresses consumer concerns can be used to reinforce brand loyalty.

That approach was the basis of one of the most successful package-goods direct-marketing programs on record: Kimberly-Clark Corp.'s "New Mothers" campaign for its Huggies diapers—a $20 million-plus campaign via Ogilvy & Mather Direct.

Recognizing the marketing significance of important lifestyle changes, direct marketers are looking at similar programs for groups such as engaged couples or young marrieds, teenagers going off to college and retirees.

Other developments in direct marketing for package-goods companies include:

storage containers, a beach mat and bicycle mount.

While the merchandise is the reward, the incentive for multiple purchase is built in. Each one of the merchandise offerings requires multiple seals to be submitted in addition to a predetermined cash value.

"The package enables us to target the advertising as opposed to mass FSIs where customers may not know about the product," says Ms. Benning.

Prospective users will be targeted in the off seasons of fall and winter.

The research results for Crystal Light reflect an integration of package goods and direct-marketing techniques.

"We've used scanner data to determine volume of product sold," says Ms. Benning.

However, Mr. Kuendig emphasizes that direct marketing relies on testing and its results, which reflect attitude and survey information.

Besides reinforcing brand image, direct marketing to bring consumers to the retailer established itself as an effective marketing vehicle.

"As compared to other promotions and advertising, the Crystal Light program had a greater impact than any other program with measured results," says Ms. Benning. ■

Donnelley seems to be asking all the right questions

Executives at Donnelley Marketing talk about "the force" as a secret weapon. However, this is not an intergalactic struggle; it is an engagment with the more earthly task of improving market share.

The 18 year old Share Force program, in its current format since 1979, is coming into greater prominence as marketers discover the benefits of targeting existing products directly to their users. In its 10th annual Survey of Promotional Practices, released in March, Stamford, Conn.-based Donnelley discovered that nearly 50% of the nation's companies are building data bases.

The key to Share Force is a questionnaire included in Carol Wright mailings twice a year to 45 million households of above average income and greater than average number of children.

The consumer is not even aware of the separate nature of the program. Identified as the Carol Wright Super Saver Gift Package, it offers free gifts, coupons and product samples if the consumer answers about 50 questions related to product usage and preference.

The questions are designed by the manufacturers, and Donnelley guarantees category exclusivity for each question.

Which manufacturers? "A good proportion of the major package-goods manufacturers are all involved in one way or another at one time or another," says John Ripka, VP, who is responsible for Share Force.

The questions typically gauge which products a family member has used most often. A question about eye drops, a product traditionally difficult to identify in terms of demographics, provides the sponsoring manufacturer with information about competitors.

The information is then used to target competing users with coupons and/or samples, at the marketers' discretion. According to Mr. Ripka, ad positioning can be enhanced when coupled with other research information—e.g. age, hobbies. The eye drops marketer could target its advertising directly to swimmers, for example.

Companies provide the consumer coupons and samples through Donnelley's fulfillment center.

Donnelley uses the approximately 4.5 million responses from each mailing to add to its Share Force data base of 20 million.

With the fourth issue coming out this month, the company is at a crossroads, "paws-ing" to look at ways to increase circulation and inspire subscription renewals.

The publishers plan to conduct research before changes are made, to see how the publication has affected consumer purchase behavior, and to test some new ideas, Mr. Brown says.

IBM, Sears set ads for videotex venture

By JUDITH GRAHAM

Advertising introducing the long-awaited videotex joint venture of IBM Corp. and Sears, Roebuck & Co. to Atlanta; Hartford, Conn.; and San Francisco breaks on cable TV soon after Memorial Day.

The commercials are designed to build awareness of what the new Prodigy Services Co. offers: home shopping, information, news and message capabilities via home computer. Broadcast TV spot buys break in the fall as Prodigy expands to several unidentified new markets.

People in the computer and communications industries will be watching closely to see how Prodigy fares. Although videotex was predicted to grow into a $1 billion market by 1992, virtually all early videotex ventures have flopped, generating little consumer enthusiasm.

But Prodigy could have a shot at breaking the market open, in part because of the deep pockets and marketing orientation of

4A's sounds its battle cry

By GARY LEVIN
and JON LAFAYETTE

Faced with prospects for an even more depressed advertising climate in 1989, agency executives at the annual meeting of the American Association of Advertising Agencies defended the "value added" role of their business to clients.

At the 70th annual meeting, held in White Sulphur Springs, W.Va., speakers continued to rally against the "commoditization" of agencies and warned members against losing a "unique perspective" by "becoming too much like our clients."

Although similar concerns have been voiced before, the tone of the meeting and comments from those in attendance signal a more concerted attempt to grapple with the problem.

Economic pressures have squeezed agency profits and are leading advertisers to view agencies more as "interchangeable vendors of marketing services" whose offerings can be picked out like "ordering Chinese takeout food," said Leonard Matthews, Four A's president.

The trend is "aided and abetted by a few misguided consultants who seem to think that all agency services can be bought by the hour the way nuts and bolts are bought by the pound.

"In too many cases, what used to be true marketing partnerships

Writers strike a boon to Games

Olympic win for NBC

By VERNE GAY
and PATRICK McGEEHAN

New York—The Writers Guild of America strike appears to be helping NBC.

The delay that the strike is causing in the fall prime-time TV season is forcing several major package-goods advertisers to break with tradition and purchase time on the 1988 Summer Olympics.

NBC-TV has confirmed that it's close to deals with several major advertisers but declined to identify them.

Procter & Gamble Co., which earlier had said it wouldn't be an Olympics sponsor, is believed to be among them, though neither P&G nor NBC would comment.

Lever Bros. sources also confirmed that it has been talking to NBC about a Summer Games buy. One source said the company was "still trying to figure out fourth-quarter budgets," adding that a buy is possible.

NBC said it had "at least" $150 million in Olympics buys pending, though some of that is expected to come from traditional sponsors, including telecommunications companies such as AT&T Co. and MCI Communications Corp.

The network already has sold about $450 million in ad time, or more than 80% of its sales goal. NBC claims it will sell out its total Olympic ad inventory by the end of July.

NBC has been aggressively pitching its scheduled telecasts of the Olympics and the World Series as the only likely "original" non-news programming on network TV from September to November.

CBS earlier indicated its fall season may not start until November. It remains unclear whether CBS will schedule original movies or miniseries against the Olympics in September. That

Kodak, Sterling to juggle media buying

Rochester, N.Y.—Eastman Kodak and its newly acquired Sterling Drug unit are expected to reshuffle some $160 million in national TV billings among their existing New York shops. Sources said that Kodak met with its agencies here May 20 and that an announcement could be made as early as this week. J. Walter Thompson USA handles some $50 million as network TV agency of record for Kodak. Lintas:New York does daytime and network buys for Sterling, while N W Ayer handles Sterling's cable TV, news and syndication buying. Slater Hanft Martin is agency of record for Sterling's sports buys. Young & Rubicam is also a Kodak agency; Lowe Marschalk and Warwick Advertising have some Sterling business. Separately, Kodak this week breaks a $25 million-to-$35 million TV campaign for its con-

Tobacco giants dig deeper into promotion

By JUDANN DAGNOLI

U.S. Surgeon General C. Everett Koop's branding of cigarette smoking as an addiction might add some fuel to the fiery arguments against cigarette ads, but advertising is only a minor part of today's media mix for tobacco marketers.

Although U.S. tobacco companies spent $871 million on advertising in 1987, they put $1.5 billion into promotion, according to ADVERTISING AGE estimates.

Direct mail also is rapidly increasing as a medium for tobacco marketers, with R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. spending more than $100 million a year in direct marketing, according to one estimate.

The industry claims an ad ban is unthinkable and refuses to consider the consequences of one. Some sources said there would be only one effect of an ad ban: Brand shares would freeze.

Brennan Moran, assistant to the president of the Tobacco Institute, said the effect of a ban would be that "Company X would no longer be able to compete with company Y," because consumption in tobacco is declining and the only way to compete is to steal share from competitors, mainly through advertising.

She said the effect of an ad ban would be on "competition, not consumption."

John C. Maxwell Jr., analyst with Wheat First Securities, said the impact of a ban would be to "stabilize what's already going on." He said Philip Morris Cos. would continue to gain share, while shares for Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp. and Liggett & Myers would continue to decline.

But share stealing can be done through direct mail. Reynolds has built up a state-of-the-art data base of 25 million smokers to target users of competing brands.

Joe Furnia, senior account manager at JFY/Audit America, Melville, N.Y., the primary contractor of the data base, said, "R.J. Reynolds certainly could survive an ad ban and Philip Morris, too, at this point, by marketing directly to their customers."

James Rosenfield, president of Rosenfield/Vinson Direct, San Diego, said he also believes the industry "can live on direct marketing alone. I also think they could live with retail distribution and vending machines closed to them. Certainly Reynolds and Philip Morris could."

Some marketing professors believe an ad ban could actually be beneficial to tobacco companies. John Deighton, assistant professor of marketing at the University of Chicago Graduate School of Business, said that if cigarettes weren't advertised—and therefore less in the public eye—smoking would become a "less political issue."

The tobacco industry has been girding for ad restrictions for some time. "No responsible international tobacco company hasn't prepared for that eventuality," said L. Douglas Keeney, president-ceo of C.A. Blockers Inc., a private-label tobacco company.

In the U.S., Philip Morris and Reynolds are running promotions that have little or nothing to do with smoking.

For more than 10 years, PM has offered consumers western-style merchandise with a largely direct-mail program called the Marlboro Country Store. This year, the company began the Benson & Hedges Quality Choice Collection, a direct effort offering big discounts on big-ticket items such as stereos.#

Publishers fear cigarette uproar

By PATRICK REILLY

The ruckus raised by the U.S. Surgeon General made publishers of magazines that accept tobacco ads more concerned than ever about a possible ad ban.

For many years, magazine publishers have resigned themselves to the continued erosion in tobacco ad spending, but tobacco spending in magazines actually rebounded in 1987 by 4% to $334 million and represents a significant chunk of many magazines' revenue streams.

"Losing cigarette ads would be a major loss for us," said Thomas Hickey, advertising sales director, Sports Illustrated. "Tobacco is still a great deal of business for us, and as long as it's a legalized product, we will solicit the business."

An ad ban would immediately hurt youth and male-oriented magazines, such as Rolling Stone and Sports Illustrated, which have traditionally relied on tobacco dollars.

In 1987, Sports Illustrated accepted $29 million in cigarette and tobacco ads, or 11% of its total ad revenue. In the first three months of 1988, the magazine's tobacco pages are up 15% and revenue up 28%, from the same period in 1987.

For Rolling Stone, tobacco ad pages increased 20% in 1987 to 161. "I would hate to lose cigarette ads, especially at a time when we are gaining the business," said Les Zeifman, VP-associate publisher.

The negative effect would also spread to national newsweeklies and women's service magazines, which derive between 5% and 10% of their revenue from tobacco ads.

But a ban would be particularly devastating to such special-interest magazines as Sport and Soap Opera Digest, where tobacco ad pages represent 21% and 49%, respectively, of their total ad pages.

"Any time you might lose 20% of your business means trouble," said Chuck Stentiford, Sport publisher.

Magazines aren't the only medium that could feel the effects of a tobacco ad ban.

About 22% of the $1.3 billion spent annually on outdoor advertising is for cigarette ads. But spending declined 14.8% to $286.6 million in 1987, according to the Institute of Outdoor Advertising.

Industry experts predict a ban would only harm them for the short term, because outdoor companies have begun to attract such non-traditional users as package-goods and service-related companies, an institute spokesman said.#

Meese makeover?

PR shop ready to take assignment

By STEVEN W. COLFORD

Illustration by David Krainik

WASHINGTON—U.S. Attorney General Edwin Meese quietly has been talking to Hill & Knowlton about a public-image makeover. But since that news leaked out just as he was firing his longtime spokesman, Terry Eastland, it may all be off.

Chuck Crawford, regional general manager of H&K's office here, said he isn't sure whether the attorney general is still interested in retaining the public relations agency's services.

"I still hope it's on, but the people at the Department [of Justice] said, 'Give us a few days' to decide," he said. "Now it's a question whether this could be effective; to really be effective, we would have had to be invisible."

The plan, confirmed by the Justice Department, was to improve the public's perception of the department and Attorney General Meese as drug fighters.

"The attorney general wanted to see if the communication of the drug enforcement effort . . . could be enhanced," Mr. Crawford said. But "we never really got to first base in the talks, because word got out . . . making it look like a political job, which it wasn't going to be."

But if the H&K assignment wasn't politically oriented, perhaps it should have been. Reaction to Mr. Meese's firing of Mr. Eastland last week for not defending him strongly enough triggered outcries from some of the attorney general's staunchest supporters.

For the second time this year, professionally produced color posters saying "Meese is a pig" are turning up all over town, plastered onto bus shelters, construction sites, government buildings, offices and vacant sites.#

Coca-Cola to shake Tropicana

By JENNIFER LAWRENCE

Coca-Cola Foods will take direct aim at Tropicana Products' stranglehold on the premium ready-to-serve orange juice segment with next month's introduction of Minute Maid Premium Choice.

In its largest, most aggressive marketing push ever, the Coca-Cola Co. division will initially roll new Minute Maid Premium Choice into the Northeast—the heart of Tropicana's ready-to-serve, chilled orange juice market.

Ad spending will be the national equivalent of $40 million, more than Coca-Cola Foods has spent on any other product launch.

A 30-second TV spot breaking the week of June 20 will position the product with the tag "Minute Maid is gourmet OJ."

The commercial, created by Lowe Marschalk, New York, features different kinds of people drinking the product.

Coca-Cola Foods wouldn't reveal specific rollout plans but confirmed that the Northeast introduction of Minute Maid Premium Choice is the first step of a national rollout.

The move by Coca-Cola Foods is expected to shore up the orange juice category, where double-digit growth in ready-to-serve, chilled orange juices has offset declines in the frozen concentrate segment.

Though Coca-Cola Foods leads the $2.6 billion orange juice category with an overall 23.6% market share, the Minute Maid brand has been soundly tromped in the fast-growing chilled segment by No. 2 Tropicana, whose growth has been driven by its Pure Premium orange juice.

Tropicana Products, acquired in March by Seagram Co., has held a competitive edge over Minute Maid and Procter & Gamble Co.'s third-ranked Citrus Hill Select.

Tropicana has been the only juice marketer to offer a ready-to-serve orange juice that's not made from frozen concentrate.

Last year, Tropicana held a 31% share of the $1.4 billion ready-to-serve orange juice market, compared with Minute Maid's 18.6% share for its chilled line made from

New General Foods plan teaches ABCs to agencies

By JUDANN DAGNOLI

General Foods Corp. unveiled a new agency payment policy for its GF USA Division last week, and the agency people working under the same old grind at Coffee & International and Oscar Mayer Foods are sure to be pressing for corporate-wide implementation.

The improved compensation package gives agencies up to 3 percentage points more in revenue for outstanding advertising. The agencies have suffered revenue declines on GF's coffees since coffee ad budgets were cut in favor of promotional spending.

Hardest hit was Ogilvy & Mather, which handled Maxwell House. Spending for that brand dropped from $70 million to nearly zero last year. GF resumed Maxwell House advertising this month, but it's not known whether spending will reach previous levels.

Still, most GF agencies will get in on the new policy. D'Arcy Masius Benton & Bowles, Grey Advertising, O&M and Young & Rubicam, all New York, work for GF USA. All except Grey also handle a coffee brand. DMB&B handles Brim and Yuban, and Y&R has Sanka.

Oscar Mayer Foods is handled by J. Walter Thompson USA, Chicago, and DMB&B.

"Eventually what is being done for one division will be done for the other divisions," one source said. "But that doesn't mean the form of payment will be the same."

Under the new compensation system going into effect January 1989,

Overall increases average 9.6%

By BEN S. COLE and MATT SIZING

Ad agencies reserved the big money for their best performers in 1987, while offering little or nothing in the way of pay gains to a large segment of the work force.

About three-quarters (74%) of the matched sample in this third annual survey of agency compensation got an increase.

Of those who received total pay—base salary and bonuses—boosts, the average increase was 15.6%, up from 14.6% a year ago.

One of every six employees who got an increase received a hike of 25% or more.

But by not giving an increase to 26.1% of their employees, U.S. agencies were able to hold overall increases to an agency average of 9.6%.

Agencies with billings of less than $10 million set the pay-increase pace by awarding 72% of their work force with an average total increase of 17%.

This year's Cole Survey of Compensation in Advertising Agencies, conducted for ADVERTISING AGE, is the largest study so far and features information on 5,250 executives, managers, copywriters and other key employees, nearly double last year's sample of 2,667.

About two-thirds (68%) of the employees in this year's study made a combined salary and bonus of up to $50,000, while another 22% earned between $50,000 and $100,000, and 10% made more than $100,000.

Of the 498 employees who hit six figures, 74 earned at least $250,000, and nine made more than $500,000.

At the very top of the agency hierarchy, it was feast or famine. Close to half the ceos saw no increase in

JESSE JACKSON

Let George do it, AA readers agree

By PETER CUNNINGHAM

Republican George Bush is the overwhelming choice for president by advertiser, media and ad agency officials, according to a spot check by ADVERTISING AGE.

Of 254 industry people surveyed, culled from the AD AGE subscriber list, 164—or 65%—said they would vote for Vice President Bush over his Democratic rivals, Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis and the Rev. Jesse Jackson.

Even the Democrats' combined totals barely exceeded half the total in favor of Vice President Bush. The unscientific "sample of convenience" showed Gov. Dukakis was the choice of 79 respondents—31%—while the Rev. Jackson got the nod from only 11 respondents, or 4%.

Vice President Bush scored his highest totals among male client respondents and his lowest percentage among female client respondents—which is where the Rev. Jackson did his best by far.

Gov. Dukakis did best among female media respondents.

The vice president also outpolled the combined totals of the Democrats in every region but the West. Even in the more liberal Northeast, where Gov. Dukakis has exhibited the most strength, Vice President Bush was the clear winner with 75 of 120 responses.

In his home state, Gov. Dukakis barely was the favorite, garnering just seven of 13 responses; the Rev. Jackson got one vote, and Vice President Bush got five. In New York, 41 of 74 people reached said they would vote for the vice president while 32 said they would vote for Gov. Dukakis; only one person was for the Rev. Jackson.

In California, 11 people said they would vote for Vice President Bush, eight were for Gov. Dukakis and four were for the Rev. Jackson.

Of the 24 who responded in Illinois, 18 were for the vice president and six were for Gov. Dukakis. None named the Rev. Jackson, a fellow Illinoisan.

Nine of 10 Michigan respondents were for the vice president, with the only other respondent pulling for the Rev. Jackson. Nine of 12 respondents in Ohio were for Vice President Bush, with the rest going to Gov. Dukakis. Five of eight Texans were for the vice president.

The breakdown by category:

- Among agency people, 58 of 89 favored Vice President Bush, 27 favored Gov. Dukakis and four favored the Rev. Jackson.
- Among media people, 49 of 78 favored Vice President Bush, 27 favored Gov. Dukakis and two said they would support the Rev. Jackson
- Among advertisers, 57 of 87 favored Vice President Bush, 25 were for Gov. Dukakis and five were for the Rev. Jackson.

Fifty-four of the 93 women surveyed, or 58%, favored the vice president; of the remaining 39 responses, Gov. Dukakis was favored by 33 and the Rev. Jackson by six.

Men favored the vice president more heavily, giving him 110, or 68%, of 161 responses. Forty-six favored Gov. Dukakis and five were for the Rev. Jackson.

One of three people reached wouldn't answer because they hadn't made up their minds or, more typically, weren't enthusiastic about any of the candidates.

These comments may tell as much as the numbers about where the ad industry stands on campaign '88:

- "I don't like any of them."
- "I'm hoping some white knight will come out of the hills."
- "Reluctantly, oh gee, oh God, oh dear, gosh—Bush."
- "Realistically and unfortunately . . . Dukakis."
- "None of the ones I want are in the running."
- "I'm for Richard Nixon."#

Diamandis likes his fellow Greek for White House

There's no doubt about who'll get Peter Diamandis' vote.

"If I don't vote for [Massachussets Gov. Michael Dukakis], they will throw me out of the Greek Club," said Mr. Diamandis, 57, president-ceo of Diamandis Communications Inc. and the son of a Greek immigrant. "Unless he [Gov. Dukakis] comes up with some harebrained idea, I'll stick with him."

Mr. Diamandis said he's a registered independent but has voted Republican in the past.

"If you are in business, you tend to think in the Republican camp. The creeping cost of government was a concern before Reagan, but despite the rhetoric, Republicans have not done a great job of cutting costs," Mr. Diamandis said.

What makes Gov. Dukakis, a Democrat, appealing, he said, is that he's "solid."

"Dukakis is not too exciting, he's a centrist," Mr. Diamandis said. "I've given up on the geniuses. I am looking for basic integrity in the human being, and that's what he has."

And Mr. Diamandis said Gov. Dukakis "comes across better" on TV than Vice President George Bush.

"I still remember when Bush went after Geraldine Ferraro in the debates. He looked foolish," Mr. Diamandis said.#

Execs say mum's the word on presidential preference

Some top corporate executives are playing their political hands close to their vests in this presidential election.

Samuel C. Johnson, chairman of S.C. Johnson & Son, said he intends to vote for Vice President George Bush. He declined to cite any reasons.

But other top advertisers contacted by ADVERTISING AGE refused to say who they intend to vote for this November.

John Smale, chairman-ceo of Procter & Gamble Co., said as far as he knows, "America still conducts a secret ballot" for president.

Jack Collins, chairman of Clorox Co., said he'd "just as soon not discuss my politics," while Gordon McGovern, ceo-president of Campbell Soup Co., said that "voting is a private matter, and I'm going to make my decision on Election Day . . . and keep it to myself."

Reuben Mark, Colgate-Palmolive Co. chairman, also declined to comment, saying he didn't want to be seen as influencing the company's employees to vote for any particular candidate.#

Agency heads split on Bush

Philip Geier Jr., chairman-ceo of Interpublic Group of Cos., New York, is unequivocal: He's for Vice President George Bush, period.

"His domestic national experience via Congress and the executive branch, plus living overseas and working in the foreign affairs arena, qualifies him as the best man to get the job done with Congress and foreign governments. The one concern I had with him faded when he took Dan Rather on and won."

Jerry Siano, vice chairman of N W Ayer, is a Bush man, too. "I think from an economic point of view, regardless of what's happened to Reagan over the last year or two, that the continuity of keeping the country going is better than a new Democratic person."

But John Noble, president of John Noble Advertising, Tiburon, Calif., has a different perspective. When asked who he was going to vote for, Mr. Noble's response was "Dukakis. What's his name? Michael. Michael Dukakis." His reasoning: "George Bush is the kind of guy who, when he's taking a shower and has to go to the bathroom, he gets out. He's too prissy for me."

William A. Robinson, chairman of William A. Robinson Inc., Chicago, a unit of Ketchum Communications, was more subdued in his answer. "If the election were tomorrow, I'd vote for Mike Dukakis. It's a more philosophical than pragmatic choice, but some of his domestic views appeal to me."

Gerrold Rubin, president, Rubin Postaer & Associates, Los Angeles, declined to answer the question, saying he'd "prefer to hide behind the surgeon general's warnings and just say, 'Such a comment could be hazardous to my health.' "#

total compensation. But those who did got big boosts, an average 22% hike. That would be even higher if the survey results had included three ceos whose big bonus checks raised their earnings by 360%, 101% and 78%. They were left out so as not to throw the total picture askew.

Creative directors who got pay raises did well. Seven of every 10 creative directors (68%) got an increase and boosted their take-home pay by an average of 19%.

Salary plus bonuses

Examining increases in total compensation—base salary plus bonus—is the best way to measure overall pay gains.

This survey calculated total increases by comparing compensation for a one-year period for each "matched" employee in the sample (those reported in both the 1986 and 1987 surveys). In most cases, bonuses were paid in 1987 for the previous year's performance.

The 26% of the sample who got no increase in pay were joined on the low end by another 15% who received small or modest total cash boosts of between 1% and 5%. Another 28% reported more substantial increases of between 6% and 12%.

On the high side, almost a third of the sample (31%) received a total earnings increase of 13% or more (see chart on Page 3).

In the largest ad agencies (more than $100 million in billings), increases averaged 11.6% overall and 84% of the work force got one—the highest overall increase and largest percentage receiving increases reported among the five agency size groups. (The overall average takes into account all matched employees—those who did and those who didn't get an increase.)

In agencies with up to $100 million in billings, overall gains were smaller: 9.8% in agencies billing up to $5 million, 7.9% in the $5 million-to-$10 million group, 7.8% in the $10 million-to-$25 million group and 8.7% in the $25 million-to-$100 million group.

The percentage getting increases ranged from a low of 70% to a high of 74%, and pay hikes for those who got one ranged from a high of 17.2% in the smallest agencies to a low of 14.6% in the $10 million-to-$25 million group.

By region

Pay increase results by region favored agencies in the South, where raises averaged 13.7% overall and 20.9% for the 83% who got one. Agencies in the West were in the runner-up spot, with increases averaging 12.4% overall and 19.8% for the 71% who collected one.

Well behind were agencies in the Midwest, which reported gains of 8.9% overall and 14.5% for the 74% who received one, and those in the East, which awarded increases of 8.2% overall and 13.9% for the 72% who got one.

Agencies put the brakes on bonus pay in 1987, offering incentives to a much smaller proportion of the work force than in the two previous years.

Less than one-quarter (24%) of the sample earned a performance-based bonus, compared with 37% in the previous year and 41% the year before that.

Even with 1987's largest individual bonus included, the average bonus shrank to 19% of base salary from 22% of base in the previous two years.

In the nation's largest agencies, the percentage of employees receiving bonus pay dropped from 50% to just 20%, and the average bonus check was trimmed (see chart on Page 36).

Executives with broad managerial responsibilities—ceos, presidents, branch office managers, VPs—experienced the bonus cutbacks first-hand: 39% of these key executives earned bonuses in 1987, compared with 48% in 1986 and 62% in 1985.

For advertising's highest-paid executives, bonuses are more often than not an essential element of cash compensation.

For example, of the 10 highest-paid ceos in this year's survey, the seven who got bonus checks made almost as much in bonus as in salary: They averaged $288,000 in bonus and $310,500 in salary. The highest-paid executive in the survey, the ceo of a large subsidiary agency, added a $573,600 bonus to a $372,500 salary to earn an extraordinary $946,100.

Base salary increases

For most agency staff, pay gains came from raises in base salary rather than bonuses. The average salary increase for all matched employees was a solid 9.5%, an improvement from the previous year's average raise of 8.2%. The average salary raise for the 75% of the sample who got one was 13.4%, just below last year's 13.6% clip (see chart on Page 36).

The quarter of the sample who got no raise at all were offset by another quarter who earned an increase of 13% or more. Raises for the other

About the survey

BOSTON—The third annual Cole Survey of Compensation in Advertising Agencies features information submitted by 260 agencies, including 14 multi-unit headquarters, 218 independent agencies, 22 subsidiaries and six branch offices.

For comparison, agencies were divided into five billing-size groups—up to $5 million, $5 million to $10 million, $10 million to $25 million, $25 million to $100 million and more than $100 million. They were also put into four regional designations (East, South, Midwest and West).

Of the 5,250 employees reported this year, 5,091 (or 97%) were assigned by their agencies to one of 30 defined survey positions; the remaining 159 (3%) occupied positions involving duties other than those described for the 30 defined positions.

Each agency submitted data for base salaries and total compensation as of Oct. 1, 1987 (total compensation is the sum of base salary at that date and any bonus paid during all of 1987).

All agencies submitted information for individual employees, using employee numbers for identification—the employee numbers were used to calculate base salary and total cash increases of "matched" employees (those reported by the same employee number and company in both last year's and this year's surveys).

Complete survey results are available in two comprehensive reports prepared by Cole Surveys.

Each agency that participated in the survey can order a 125-page "Confidential Report" that features customized displays comparing its data to that of two peer groups of other agencies.

Agencies also may order a "Cole Edition" of the report, a non-customized version with detailed salary and total pay information for all 30 positions.

For more information, call Cole Surveys at 1-800-343-2215.#

Ceos on par with other industries

half fell between the two extremes: 18% received increases of between 1% and 5%, while 32% earned raises of between 6% and 12%.

The most popular salary raise was 5%, earned by one of every 10 employees.

Agencies billing more than $100 million awarded an average increase of 11%. In agencies billing up to $100 million the average raise varied little, from a high of 9.1% in agencies billing up to $5 million to a low of 7.9% in the $10 million-to-$25 million group.

Salary results by region show the South on top with an average raise of 14.5%, the East and West deadlocked at 9.9%, and the Midwest lowest at 7.6%.

Salary increases in the East and West illustrate the relationship between three key increase statistics: the average increase for all employees, the percentage who got an increase and the average increase for those who got one.

In both regions, the overall increase was 9.9%. In the East, the 72% who got a raise averaged 14.1%; in the West, the 62% who got an increase averaged 19.1%.

Increases for those who got one were clearly higher in the West, and only the West's larger proportion of "zero increases" brought its average increase for all employees down to the same 9.9% figure reported by agencies in the East.

Position by position

Pay levels are driven first and foremost by agency size, as measured in client billings. But positions are another important factor, by area of expertise (see chart on Page 34).

Ceos of independent and subsidiary agencies generally are the highest-paid executives in advertising. While ceo pay levels rose steadily in relation to billings in agencies billing up to $100 million, the big jump came in the largest agencies, where the average paycheck surpassed the $400,000 mark.

In the largest independent agencies, the ceo's cash earnings soared to an average of $418,800, on a par with the paychecks earned by ceos in banking and other major industries.

Subsidiary heads made an average of $30,000 to $40,000 less than independent-agency ceos in agencies with billings between $5 million and $100 million, but they surpassed their independent counterparts in the largest agencies, earning an average of $425,70.

Ceos of subsidiaries, unlike independent-agency heads, are often paid by very large parent companies with compensation programs that emphasize performance-based bonus pay.

The ceo bonus results bear out this distinction: More than half (55%) of the subsidiary heads earned a bonus averaging 57% of base salary (or $99,900), while a little more than one-third (37%) of the independent-agency ceos received bonus pay averaging 46% of base salary (or $49,500).

The total package for ceos is often supplemented by a variety of other company-paid perquisities (see chart on this page).

Just below the ceos in the management hierarchy are presidents and exec VPs. Presidents made more than exec VPs in agencies of every size, but their pay edge grew considerably larger as agency billings increased.

In the smallest agencies, for example, presidents earned total cash averaging $54,100, or 13.7% more than the exec VPs' $47,600. In the largest agencies, the pay gap widened to more than $54,000, with total cash averaging $254,300 for presidents and $200,100 for exec VPs.

A president's bonus was about twice as big, averaging 36% of base salary; exec VP bonuses averaged about 18% of base.

Branch office manager pay started at an average of $35,400 in the smallest offices and rose to $89,600 in the $25 million-to-$100 million group. In branch offices billing more than $100 million, however, total cash for branch managers jumped to an average of $192,000, just shy of the $200,100 average for exec VPs.

To many ad agencies, cost control and profitability are survival issues, and "dollars and cents" positions like chief financial officer and controller are where the action is. Financial officers are among the highest-paid advertising executives, particularly in the largest agencies, where they earned an average of $156,600. The highest-paid financial officer made $421,000; total salary/-bonus compensation for all chief financial officers averaged $68,500.

Controllers' pay started at an average of $27,100 in the smallest agencies and rose moderately to $43,600 in agencies billing $25 million to $100 million; in the largest agencies, controllers made an average of $79,200.

In bonus pay, 43% of the chief financial officers earned bonuses averaging 19% of base salary, while 29% of the controllers earned bonuses averaging 12% of base.

The top creative talents—creative directors, associate directors and supervisors—are also among the highest-paid professionals in advertising.

Top-paid creative: $746,400

In the largest agencies, creative chiefs earned an average of $192,000, and the highest-paid creative director made $746,400, the second-largest paycheck reported this year. The average for all 216 creative directors was $103,600. In the smallest agencies, creative directors took home an average of about $40,000 in total cash pay.

While associate creative directors and creative supervisors each earned $36,700 in the smallest agencies, associate directors pulled ahead in the $10 million-to-$25 million group, averaging total cash of $59,800 to the creative supervisors' $52,700. The pay differential was even larger in the largest agencies, where total cash for associate directors and supervisors averaged $107,200 and $83,000, respectively.

Performance-based bonuses were awarded to 33% of the creative directors, 31% of the associate directors and 21% of the creative supervisors. Creative directors earned bonuses averaging 22% of base salary, about twice the size of the average incentive paid to associate directors (11% of base) and supervisors (10%).

The pay lines for comparable positions in art and copy are remarkably similar. For example, senior art directors earned average total cash of $50,500, while senior copywriters averaged $49,500. Bonus results are also similar: 19% of the senior art directors received bonuses averaging 10% of base salary; 19% of the senior copywriters earned bonuses equal to 9% of base.

Art directors averaged $36,500 in total cash, only $1,700 less than the $38,200 average for midlevel copywriters. Bonuses as a percent of base pay averaged 7% for art directors and 6% for copywriters.

Total cash for junior copywriters started at $16,500 in the smallest agencies, rose to an average of $21,000 to $24,000 in agencies billing $5 million to $100 million and topped off at $32,000 in the largest agencies. Six percent of the junior copywriters earned bonuses equal to about three weeks' pay.

New business

The goal for business development managers is to land new clients, a challenge that offers generous rewards for success, particularly in large agencies where new accounts can mean millions of dollars in billings.

Total cash for business development specialists jumped to $145,000 in the largest agencies, not far behind the $156,600 average for chief financial officers. For the smallest agencies, the starting average was $39,000.

Nearly half (45%) earned performance-based bonuses, second only to the 55% rate for subsidiary-agency ceos.

Directors of account management act as the chief liaison between agency and client, while account planning managers are responsible for developing longer-term strategies to accomplish client objectives.

In the smallest agencies, directors earned an average of $45,500, or $9,000 more than planning managers; in agencies billing $25 million to $100 million, the total cash difference was about twice as large—$84,000 for directors vs. $65,700 for planners.

In the largest agencies, directors earned an average of $134,400, more than double the $63,500 average for account planners.

Although senior and junior account executives earn respectable salaries and bonuses, agency size has less impact on pay levels in these positions than in most other jobs. Total pay for senior account executives averaged $40,200 in the smallest agencies and rose to $49,500 in the largest shops. Thirty percent of the senior account executives collected bonuses averaging 14% of base pay.

Media directors and associate directors in the nation's largest agencies earn far more than their peers in smaller agencies. In the four smallest agency-size groups, media directors earned paychecks averaging $27,000, $34,000, $45,900, and $59,800; in the largest agencies, their total cash jumped to an average of $104,200.

For broadcast production heads, like media specialists, the big money lies in the big agencies. In agencies billing up to $10 million, broadcast managers earned about $21,000 to $22,000; in the $25 million-to-$100 million group, their total cash just about doubled, to $43,900; in the largest agencies, paychecks for broadcast chiefs nearly doubled again, to an average of $86,200.

The producer position is found primarily in agencies billing more than $25 million. In the $25 million-to-$100 million size group, producers earn an average of $40,900; in the largest agencies, producers make $57,600.

Market research heads earn solid paychecks in agencies of every size: their total cash started at an average of $31,000 in the smallest agencies and climbed to a peak of $64,600 in agencies billing $25 million to $100 million. About one of every three market research heads (33%) earned a bonus averaging 8% of base pay. equal to about one month's salary.

Average total cash for public relations managers started at $31,200 in the smallest agencies. In the three size groups of agencies billing $5 million to $100 million, average paychecks for PR managers varied by less than $2,000, in a range of $47,400 to $49,000.

Nothing average about bonuses

Boston—In advertising and other major industries, bonuses are often the wild card of compensation. Huge bonus checks account for some of the largest pay hikes reported this year—so large, in fact, that nine increases of 75% or more were excluded from the averages to avoid distorting the results for all employees.

For example, in last year's survey, the ceo of a midsize independent agency earned a $19,500 bonus on top of a $100,000 base salary, or total cash of $119,500.

This year, the same ceo collected a $400,000 bonus—more than 20 times larger than the previous year's—and a $150,000 salary, raising his total pay to $550,000—an increase of 360%.#

In the largest agencies, the PR chief earned an average of $68,800.

Some 29% of the PR managers earned bonuses totaling 8% of base pay.

The human resource director, a position found primarily in the larger agencies (over two-thirds reported work in agencies billing more than $25 million). Average total cash pay for human resource directors starts at $21,500 in the smallest shops and jumps into the $34,000-to-$38,000 range in agencies with billings between $5 million and $100 million. In the largest agencies, broader responsibilities offer a huge jump in compensation: their total pay soars to an average of $82,700.

Traffic managers earn an average of $20,500 in the smallest agencies and about twice that amount—$41,900—in the largest agencies. Although traffic managers are not among the industry's top earners, the highest-paid traffic boss in this survey gets $125,000.#

Whirlpool is tops in ad efficiency

By R. CRAIG ENDICOTT

Whirlpool Corp. blew past other leading national advertisers in ADVERTISING AGE's first advertising efficiency rating report by boosting sales per $1 of advertising 87.6% in the fourth quarter 1987 compared with the corresponding period in 1986.

Ad efficiency, a critical measurement in determining the effectiveness of a marketing strategy, is derived from dividing a company's U.S. sales by its U.S. measured media, resulting in sales per ad dollars.

The AD AGE survey, to run quarterly, found that 58 of the 100 companies surveyed improved their ad efficiency, although 37 of these big spenders boosted efficiency by reducing advertising as sales improved—Whirlpool among them.

Whirlpool's ad efficiency for the quarter was $121.19, up from $64.61. This compares with a 9.3% increase averaged by the 100 companies charted, or $89.22 in 1987, up from $81.65 in 1986.

Chrysler Corp. led a select group of only 16 advertisers who grew in efficiency and increased advertising. Chrysler's ad efficiency improved 24.8% in the two measured quarters as its sales expanded 37% on a 9.8% growth in advertising.

In the aggregate, measured advertising for the 100 increased 3.5% to $3.6 billion and sales expanded 8.6% to $247.1 billion. Lower measured advertising was reported by 52 companies, 85 increased sales and 42 improved their ad-to-sales ratio—a flipside of ad efficiency.

The efficiency swing at Whirlpool resulted from a 45% decline in measured advertising and a 3.1% growth in revenues between the comparable quarters. Ad spending dropped at the Benton Harbor, Mich.-based company when it diverted advertising budgeted for the period to the second and third quarters to back its new "100% Customer Commitment" product guarantee for Whirlpool and KitchenAid lines, according to the company.

Texas Air Corp. and Kraft Inc. actually had greater movement in efficiency between the two quarters. Texas Air grew 194.3% but its comparable results were distorted by the inclusion of Eastern Airlines in only the fourth quarter 1987. Eastern was purchased at the end of 1986. Kraft's efficiency growth of 102.9% was distorted by heavy acquisitions in the foodservice industry that boosted sales 28%.

Measuring ad efficiency is not a perfect science. Quarterly measured spending is available in only eight major media, although that media represented 91.9% of all measured media of AA's 200 leading national advertisers in 1987. (See chart footnotes for media used.)

There naturally is a bias against other media forms and below-the-line spending.

Most companies on the chart were AA's 100 Leaders in 1987. AA dipped into the Second 100 to replace the private companies and the foreign-based companies in the top 100 that do not issue quarter financial reports.

Seventy of the 100 companies charted obtain revenue from outside the U.S. But quarterly statements, unlike annual reports, do not break out sales on a geographic basis. In these cases, U.S. sales were estimated by applying the U.S. share of worldwide returns in 1986.

For the few that do not regionalize financial returns, AA estimated U.S. sales after consulting the companies. The fourth quarter used for this report is October-December, or the fiscal period of a company that approximates this time frame.#

THE NATION'S TOP 50 MARKETING/ ADVERTISING RESEARCH COMPANIES

RESEARCH BUSINESS REVIEW

AVID Productions

Top 50 researchers' 'real growth' tops 13%

But operations outside U.S. make numbers appear higher because of weaker dollar

By Jack J. Honomichl

Top-line data from this, the 14th Annual Industry Review compiled exclusively for ADVERTISING AGE, indicate that 1987 was an extraordinary growth year, with revenues up 16.8% from 1986.

However, closer analysis of revenue gains, 1987 over 1986, for 136 marketing, advertising and public opinion research companies, reveals a healthy but not extraordinary growth rate.

The main element in this analysis comes from the 1986-87 revenue records of 50 leading U.S. research organizations, which in aggregate had worldwide revenues of $2,308,600,000 in 1987, up 16.8%. After adjustment for inflation (3.6% according to the U.S. Department of Labor Consumer Price Index-U, monthly average), this boils down to a "real growth" rate of 13.2%.

Of this $2.3 billion, however, $734.1 million, or 31.8%, came from operations outside the U.S., and to that extent the Top 50 growth rate was hyped by the declining value of the dollar vis-a-vis most major foreign currencies. This makes the Top 50 growth rate, when expressed in U.S. dollars, appear significantly higher than it was.

When these giant operations—A.C. Nielsen Co., IMS International, Research International, MRB Group and Louis Harris & Associates—with a major share of revenues coming from outside the U.S. are subtracted out, the remaining 45 top companies show a growth rate of 11.1%, or 7.5% after adjustment for inflation.

Another set of depreciating data comes from the Council of American Survey Research Organizations. The $204.9 million reported by 86 CASRO members not included in the Top 50 listing represented a 7.0% gain over 1986, or 3.4% after inflation adjustment.

To arrive at a realistic indication of the 1987 growth rate of domestic-only U.S. research industry, subtract out the five big overseas operations and then add in the CASRO numbers, making a base of 136 companies that get almost all their revenues from within the U.S. The result is a growth rate of 10.5%, or 6.9% after inflation adjustment. This is a healthy growth rate by any standard, and especially good when compared with that of the Top 50 U.S. advertising agencies (see story below).

This year's listings grew to 50 companies despite the loss of three—SAMI/Burke and Decisions Center (which had line identity last year but are now included via acquisition in new listings, namely Arbitron/SAMI/Burke and Research International) and Ehrhart-Babic Group, which chose not to participate. Newcomers in 1987 include Pharmaceutical Data Services, Conway/Milliken, CLT Research, Cambridge Reports, Directions for Decisions, Vanderveer Group and Research International.

As in previous years, the 1987 revenues for each top organization are actual and may include revenues gained from acquisitions during the year, as explained in the profiles that follow. Their growth rates, however, have been calculated on a comparable base from year to year. So, if company A bought company B anytime during 1987, company A's growth rate is calculated on its total revenues for 1987, plus those of company B for the whole year, vis-a-vis the same base in 1986. If this procedure were not followed, the industry growth rate would appear to be much higher, but would be to some degree merely a reflection of acquired revenues.

Also, as in past listings, the revenues for the Top 50 are for research activities only; certain companies, as explained in individual company profiles, have significant additional revenues from non-research areas.

A top executive of Dun & Bradstreet is quoted privately as saying, "We want to be the IBM of the marketing information industry." A big step toward that goal of worldwide dominance took place in 1984 when D&B acquired A.C. Nielsen Co. (see Page S-18). Then in 1987, D&B tried to acquire Information Resources Inc., a move thwarted by the FTC, which cited restraint of trade. Last Feb. 8, D&B announced its intention to acquire IMS International (No. 3) for about $1.77 billion, which would be the largest marketing service company acquisition in history.

Assuming that the IMS acquisition goes through later this spring as expected, D&B would control about $1,062,600,000 in research revenues around the world. That's nearly one and one-half times the revenues of the worldwide revenues of Young & Rubicam, the largest U.S. advertising agency.

There's no question that research is big international business. Of the Top 50 companies listed this year, six are either partly or wholly owned by European companies; two others, while registered U.S. corporation, in fact have their top management in London.

The company-by-company profiles that follow (on Page S-8) detail the operations of each of 1987's Top 50, major changes that took place during 1987, and their expansion plans for the remainder of 1988. ■

Growth comparisons explain buys

The 50 largest U.S. advertising agencies had gross worldwide revenues of $8,449,000,000 in 1987, according to the recent U.S Advertising Agency Profiles in ADVERTISING AGE. This was an increase of 13.7%; 42% of those revenues came from outside the U.S.

The Top 50 research agencies had worldwide gross revenues of $2,308,600,000 in 1987, up 16.8% from 1986; 31.8% of those revenues came from outside the U.S.

In both cases, the growth rate was hyped by the weakening U.S. dollar vis-a-vis most major currencies in the world, and especially the U.K., West Germany and Japan. The growth rates are far different when we look at U.S. revenues only. On this basis, the 50 largest advertising agencies grew just 3.8% from 1986 to 1987 (and only 0.2% after adjustment for inflation), and the Top 50 research agencies grew about 10.9%, or 7.3% after adjustment for inflation.

It should be noted that these are not pure apple-to-apple comparisons. The advertising agency revenues in many cases include non-advertising activities, such as public relations, research or direct-marketing subsidiaries. In the case of the Top 50 research organizations, every attempt has been made to screen out non-research activities.

These growth comparisons help explain why some major advertising agencies—notably Saatchi & Saatchi, Ogilvy Group and WPP Group—have been acquiring large research operations and why the financial community is so bullish on marketing information as a growth industry.

2 Arbitron/SAMI/Burke, Minneapolis. Units within Business Services Group of Control Data Corp.; '87 revenues are estimated at $325 million, up about 6.2% from '86. These do not include Broadcast Advertisers Reports and its Radio-TV Reports subsidiary acquired by Arbitron in 1987.

This conglomerate includes Arbitron Ratings Co., founded in 1949 and since 1967 a wholly owned subsidiary of CDC; SAMI/Burke, an organization created by the merger in 1986 of Selling Areas-Marketing Inc., founded in 1966; and Burke Marketing Services, founded in 1931, which was then acquired by CDC from Time Inc. in December, 1987. The growth rate is calculated on a common base, 1986 to 1987.

Arbitron produces radio, television and cable audience studies at the local-market level using mail diaries, or panels of meter-equipped or people meter-equipped households. Audience data are provided for 213 TV markets (ADIs), 13 of which are measured by a combination of meters and diaries, and one of which—Denver—is measured by a people meter service, ScanAmerica. TV reports account for about 52% of Arbitron's revenues.

The balance comes from measurement of 259 radio markets, with year-around audience ratings in 79 markets. In 1987, Arbitron redesigned its local-market reports to contain data on listening locations and audience location.

Arbitron has 1,673 full-time employees in 29 U.S. locations and a central telephone interviewing facility in Laurel, Md., which has 55 stations. The SAMI/Burke operation includes six units.

18 ASI Market Research, New York. Founded in 1962; owned by Apollo Partners Ltd. Revenues in 1987 were $16.7 million, down 2.3% from 1986.

In December, 1987, ASI's parent, IDC Services, was acquired by Apollo partners, a private company founded by former Viacom executives. The revenue decline from 1986 is because of various operations being closed down at the end of that year. The continuing business activities described here grew about 13% from 1986 to 1987.

ASI activities are concentrated in two areas: Advertising Research, specializing in controlled audience pre-testing and on-air testing of TV commercials and testing of print ads, and Entertainment Research, specializing in evaluating entertainment projects, including pilots for TV and movie films.

ASI's TV commercial persuasion testing system, Persuasion Plus, uses as its key methodological component Tru-Share, a validated measurement of persuasive impact. As with ASI's other service, Recall Plus, this is CATV-based and operates in 11 to 15 cities. ASI's Apex system, which fuses recall, persuasion and diagnostics, is thought to be the most comprehensive TV commercial testing procedure.

ASI R&D includes two data bases, one dealing with the nature of the underlying structure of recall, and one with a means of harnessing mood and emotion in advertising. The company recently launched a new service, Attention Linkage, which is designed to diagnose and improve recall performance.

Mediamark Research Inc., New York. Founded 1979; 80% owned by MAI PLC, London; '87 revenues were $11.2 million, up 12.2% from '86.

MRI operates a syndicated/product research service based on personal interviews with 20,000 adults each year regarding their exposure to advertising media and, via leave-behind questionnaires, purchase data on a broad line of products and services.

Clients—including advertising agencies, advertisers, magazines, newspapers, broadcasters and cable networks—can have on-line access to 25 MRI reports. Also, data are linked to Prizm, Acorn and Vision geodemographic systems and the Vals psychographic system.

MRI also produces special reports each year based on a two-year data base: a business-to-business report; the Upper Deck (affluent market); plus reports related to the top local markets, including audience data on newspaper and broadcast stations. The company makes available a microcomputer system called Memri, which enables subscribers to process MRI and other data bases. MRI's Custom Research Division specializes in studies of special markets, including the recontacting of MRI's existing annual sample to collect additional data.

During 1987, MRI closed its Nabscan scanner panel subsidiary. MRI's year-to-year growth rate has been adjusted to put 1986 and 1987 on a common base. MRI has 46 full-time salaried employees in New York, Chicago and San Francisco.

Chairman-CEO is Timothy Joyce, 54. President-Chief Operating Officer is Alain J. Tessier, 54.

MRB Group, New York. Since 1987, wholly owned subsidiary of WPP Group PLC, London; '87 revenues were $61.1 million, up 14.9% from '86.

During 1987, this conglomerate divested two units, Market Behavior Ltd. in the U.K. and Merac in Bahrain. The revenue growth rate is adjusted to give a common base, 1986 to 1987.

MRB consists of Simmons Market Research Bureau and Winona Market Research Bureau (accunting for 57% of MRB revenues); British Market Research Bureau, Mass-Observation and MRB International in U.K.; Basisresearch in West Germany; Hellas MRB in Greece; Japan MRB in Japan. The largest MRB service is the Simmons Study of Media & Markets, in its 25th year, based on a sample of 19,000 adults and including information on media usage, product and brand purchase behavior, leisure activities, lifestyle and life stage. This data base is put on Bernoulli discs for use on PCs through Simmons' Choices software system. These data are also enhanced via links with other data suppliers, such as Donnelley's ClusterPlus and Claritas' Prizm for geodemographic target marketing.

In conjunction with Arbitron Ratings, the SMM provides local broadcasters with Product Target-Aid and CrossTraQ. In cooperation with Nielsen Media Research, a new service, TV Conquest, is being introduced to give stations, agencies and advertisers another way to target local customers.

SMRB conducted and published in 1987 the national Study of Local Newspaper Ratings, based on a study of readership practices of more than 60,000 adults in 56 leading markets, along with their buying behavior.

In conjunction with these newspaper data, SMRB recently teamed with Arbitron to develop a comprehensive single-source local-market data base. The prototype is being tested in Phoenix.

Winona operates a 210-station CATI phone interviewing system from its facility in Phoenix. During 1987, this unit derived more than half of its revenues from full-service surveys related to concept, product and home-use studies. Winona will this year introduce new syndicated studies, SampleAmerica and HispanicAmerica, based on 20,000 Hispanic households.

MRB employs a full-time staff of 660 in 12 offices worldwide. Chairman-CEO is Frank Stanton, 58.

EQUITRAC™ Now Measures The Unmeasurable–
Advertising Campaign Equity

You have always known that an advertising campaign can have a special value all of its own. Something that can grow over time. Something that can magnify the effectiveness of the individual commercials within the campaign.

This "something" is campaign equity. And now it can be measured.

Using a campaign collage board to represent the key campaign "threads", EQUITRAC measures Advertising Campaign Equity through its key components:

1. Recognition of the basic campaign format.
2. Association of this format with the right sponsor.
3. Positive attitudes toward the campaign.

With this measurement and the diagnostic insights it provides, EQUITRAC serves as an unparalleled campaign assessment tool to reassure you that your campaign is right on track, needs modification, or needs to be changed.

EQUITRAC. It can tell you how much your campaign is really worth. Write or phone for a complete brochure.

1 A.C. Nielsen Co., Northbrook, Ill. Founded in 1923; since 1984, wholly owned subsidiary of Dun & Bradstreet Corp.; '87 research revenues are estimated at $765 million. After accounting for acquisitions made during '87 (Majers, NPD Packaged Goods Division and a research company in Finland) and putting both years on a common basis, growth rate, 1987 over 1986, is estimated at 17.6%. About 60% of ACN research revenues come from operations in 27 countries outside U.S.

Last year was an extraordinary one for the largest marketing research company in the world. Its Marketing Research Group started a Confectionery Index market measurement service; expanded its Scantrack (and Scantrack Plus) scanner panel service to 14 new U.S. markets and introduced comparable services in Canada, U.K., France, Germany, The Netherlands, New Zealand and Australia; acquired the NPD Packaged Goods Division of NPD Group and started to build the NPD/Nielsen Electronic Household Panel, a single-source system to relate product purchasing with TV viewing; announced ScanPro marketing models; launched TestSite Services, a new service in Canada; and in Japan, started Vendex, a measurement of vending machine sales.

The most traumatic event of the year was the attempt by ACN-parent D&B to acquire arch competitor Information Resources Inc., a move stopped by the Federal Trade Commission for possible restraint of trade.

In early 1988, Nielsen Marketing Research Group USA announced it was phasing out its ERIM single-source test marketing service and that it intended to acquire Syndicated Data Consultants, Ltd., London. Also early this year, D&B announced its intention to acquire IMS International the third-largest marketing research organization in the world.

Nielsen Media Research in the U.S. completed its Nielsen Television Index service conversion to Nielsen People Meter with 2,800 households in the sample. It also expanded its local-market meter panel service to Seattle and Hartford. It announced Advertiser Tracking System, a service monitoring purchase and audience delivery of spot, network, syndication, cable and adjacent-market viewing; Client Cume System, a service to determine the number of households or persons reached by a commercial aired on different TV programs; Dailies Plus, a PC-based system that lets clients retrieve national TV ratings overnight; and Monitor Plus, analyses of competitive TV-commercial occurrence data for brands or product classes.

Also early this year, Nielsen Media Research announced expansion of local-market meter panel service to the Sacramento-Stockton market area, Alaska, Hawaii and Minneapolis-St. Paul.

Chairman-CEO is John C. Holt, 49. He also is an exec VP of D&B and on that company's board. Richard W. Vipond, 60, president of Nielsen Marketing Research Group, retired May 1; his successor is Albert J. Kretch. James D. Lyons, 53, is president of Nielsen's Media Research Group.

13 NPD Group, Port Washington, N.Y. Founded in 1953; privately held corporation. Research revenues in 1987 were $25.7 million, up 18.2% from 1986. These revenues and the growth rate exclude all revenues related to NPD's Packaged Goods Division, which was spun off in '87 into a joint venture company, NPD/Nielsen. About 2.3% of NPD revenues come from outside the U.S.

NPD Group consists of two business units. Syndicated Services provides tracking data bases covering store movement, consumer purchasing and consumer attitude/awareness data series to industries such as toys, apparel, textiles, sporting goods, jewelry, petroleum/automotive, electronics, foodservice and in-home food consumption, with data collection via mail diary panels, store audits, point-of-sale computerized audits and telephone interviewing techniques.

Custom Services consists primarily of NPD's HTI Custom Research and Marketing Models Divisions, operating a 200,000-household fixed mail panel and a related CRT central telephone interviewing facility in College Park, Md. The Marketing Models Division provides proprietary mathematical modeling, services such as ESP and BrandStar, for pre-test marketing and new product simulation.

Last year NPD acquired Smart Inc., a research company specializing in the sporting goods field, which has been merged into NPD's sports services, and started Intelect, a consumer electronics product audit program; started TOPS, a toy attitude/awareness tracking service; and through HTI, launched a single-question monthly large-scale survey, A to Z Insta-Vue.

So far in '88, NPD has acquired Marketing Network, a Atlanta-based telephone research company specializing in business-to-business studies, and announced a new healthcare tracking service developed in conjunction with the Insti-

Oxtoby-Smith, New York. Founded in 1956; privately held corporation. Revenues in 1987 were $5.1 million, down 12.1% from 1986.

This survey research company, with 65 full-time salaried employees, is distinctive in that about 60% of revenues come from clients for whom O-S assumes major responsibility for the consumer research function, both as a consultant and research supplier. Among such clients currently are Block Drug, Coca-Cola Foods, Rolls-Royce, MCI Telecommunications and House of Seagram. The loss of one such client, American Motors Corp., because of its merger with Chrysler, is the main reason for the revenue decline from 1986.

The balance of O-S revenues comes from custom ad hoc survey projects, consultation and research and testimony relating to legal matters, including trademark litigation and advertising claim substantiation. During 1987, O-S introduced Pro-Sort, a syndicated pre-test system for sales promotions. It will go national in 1988.

The organization's professional staff is supported by a central telephone interviewing facility with 20 stations, all CRT-equipped, and a focus group operation.

Total Research Corp., Princeton, N.J. Founded in 1975; public corporation, traded NASDAQ. Revenues in 1987 were $5.6 million, up 11.4% from 1986.

This custom ad hoc survey research organization with 85 full-time exempt employees (plus about 300 part-timers) started in 1986 to emphasize proprietary, standardized packages of statistical and analysis techniques, to wit: Price Elasticity Measurement System to evaluate pricing strategies; Competitive Share Model to predict the effect of product line extension or product elimination on a client's own market shares and those of competitors; Compass (Components Assessment) to analyze the structure of a competitive market and determine the effect product attributes have on purchase decisions; and, new in 1987, BrandPower, a comprehensive strategic market structure study.

Total Research collects data via personal interviews, focus groups, mail surveys, store audits, product use tests and telephone interviewing.

There are two phone facilities: Tampa, with 60 stations (52 CATI-equipped), and Princeton, with 16 stations (all CATI). Both are linked to the company's HP 3000 series computer. Chairman-ceo is Lorin Zissman, 57.

Walker Research, Indianapolis. Founded in 1964 (succeeding Walker Research Service, founded in 1939); privately held corporation. Research revenues in 1987 were $20.1 million, down 5.6% from '86. (These do not include affiliate Walker Clinical Evaluations, which conducts Phase III clinical investigations and trials of drugs, cosmetics, foods, animal products, medical devices, electronic products.)

In 1988, Walker will conduct the eighth biennial update of its Industry Image Study, which assesses consumer attitudes toward surveys and polls. Walker has 134 full-time salaried employees, 132 full-time hourly and 538 part-time.

Westat, Rockville, Md. Founded in 1961; an employee-owned corporation; '87 research revenues were $61.3 million, up 74.3% from '86. Revenues include those of Crossley Surveys, a subsidiary since 1983, but not of computing unrelated to research activities. Westat specializes in large-scale survey research projects, about 94% of which are conducted for federal agencies.

The extraordinary '87 revenue gain was mostly because of one study, the National Medical Expenditures Survey sponsored by the Department of Health & Human Services, which had Westat as prime contractor along with two subcontractors (this subcontract work, amounting to $12.2 million, is included in Westat revenues).

Westat's staff includes 372 exempt salaried professionals (up 31% from 1986), a non-exempt salaries staff of 140, and about 500 staffers for telephone interviewing, support and survey processing. It operates central telephone facilities in Rockville and Frederick, Md.

President-CEO is Joseph A. Hunt, 52. Edward C. Bryant, 72, a founder of the company, is chairman emeritus.

Wirthlin Group, McLean, Va. Founded in 1969; privately held corporation. Revenues in 1987 were $8 million, down 23.1% from 1986. Formerly Decision/Making/Information, this full-service survey organization changed its name in 1987.

TWG, with 80 full-time employees (49 salaried exempt), is organized into strategic business units: marketing research, public affairs and political research, an important segment because of Richard Wirthlin's role as strategy/research adviser to prominent Republicans including President Reagan, Sen. Robert Dole and the Republican National Committee. This political work explains the drop in revenues from 1986, a political cycle year. TWG has client service offices in New York (new in 1987), Princeton, N.J., Chicago, Santa Ana, Cal., and Los Angeles (new in 1988). The organization has a central telephone interviewing center (142 stations) in Provo, Utah.

In '87, TWG became exclusive research vendor to Hill & Knowlton; acquired Welch Communications, a direct mail agency; and developed a research model for application in the corporate image area.

Founder-chairman is Richard B. Wirthlin, 57. Thomas B. Hughes, 43, is president-chief operating officer.

Yankelovich Clancy Shulman, Westport, Conn. founded in 1958; since 1986, a wholly owned unit within Saatchi & Saatchi Consulting, a subsidiary of Saatchi & Saatchi Plc., London. Revenues in 1987 were $24 million, up 13.4% from 1986.

The company is organized into three divisions: Research specializes in ad hoc consumer marketing and business-to-business research, public opinion/policy studies, corporate communications studies, and multisponsor surveys to special groups, such as media, brokers, individual investors, portfolio managers and Eurasian investors.

Consulting and Monitor Lifestyle Syndicated Surveys specializes in 6 areas: product positioning and relaunch; market structure analysis; new product and service development; concept screening and prioritization; acquisition studies and new business analysis; and marketing plan development and optimization. There are three surveys—Monitor, Youth Monitor, and, new in '88, Hispanic Monitor.

Market Response Modeling focuses on modeling and market response assessment research, featuring the Litmus Model.

So far in 1988, YCS has made two acquisitions: Albemarle Market Research Ltd., London, a full-service survey company to be renamed Yankelovich Clancy Shulamn/Albemarle, and American Marketing Services, Newport Beach, Calif., to be renamed Yankelovich Clancy Shulman/West.

There are 110 full-time salaried exempt employees at YCS.

President-ceo is Robert S. Shulman, 36. Chairman is Kevin J. Clancy, 45.

Hal Riney vs. Japan

Saturn ads to take risks

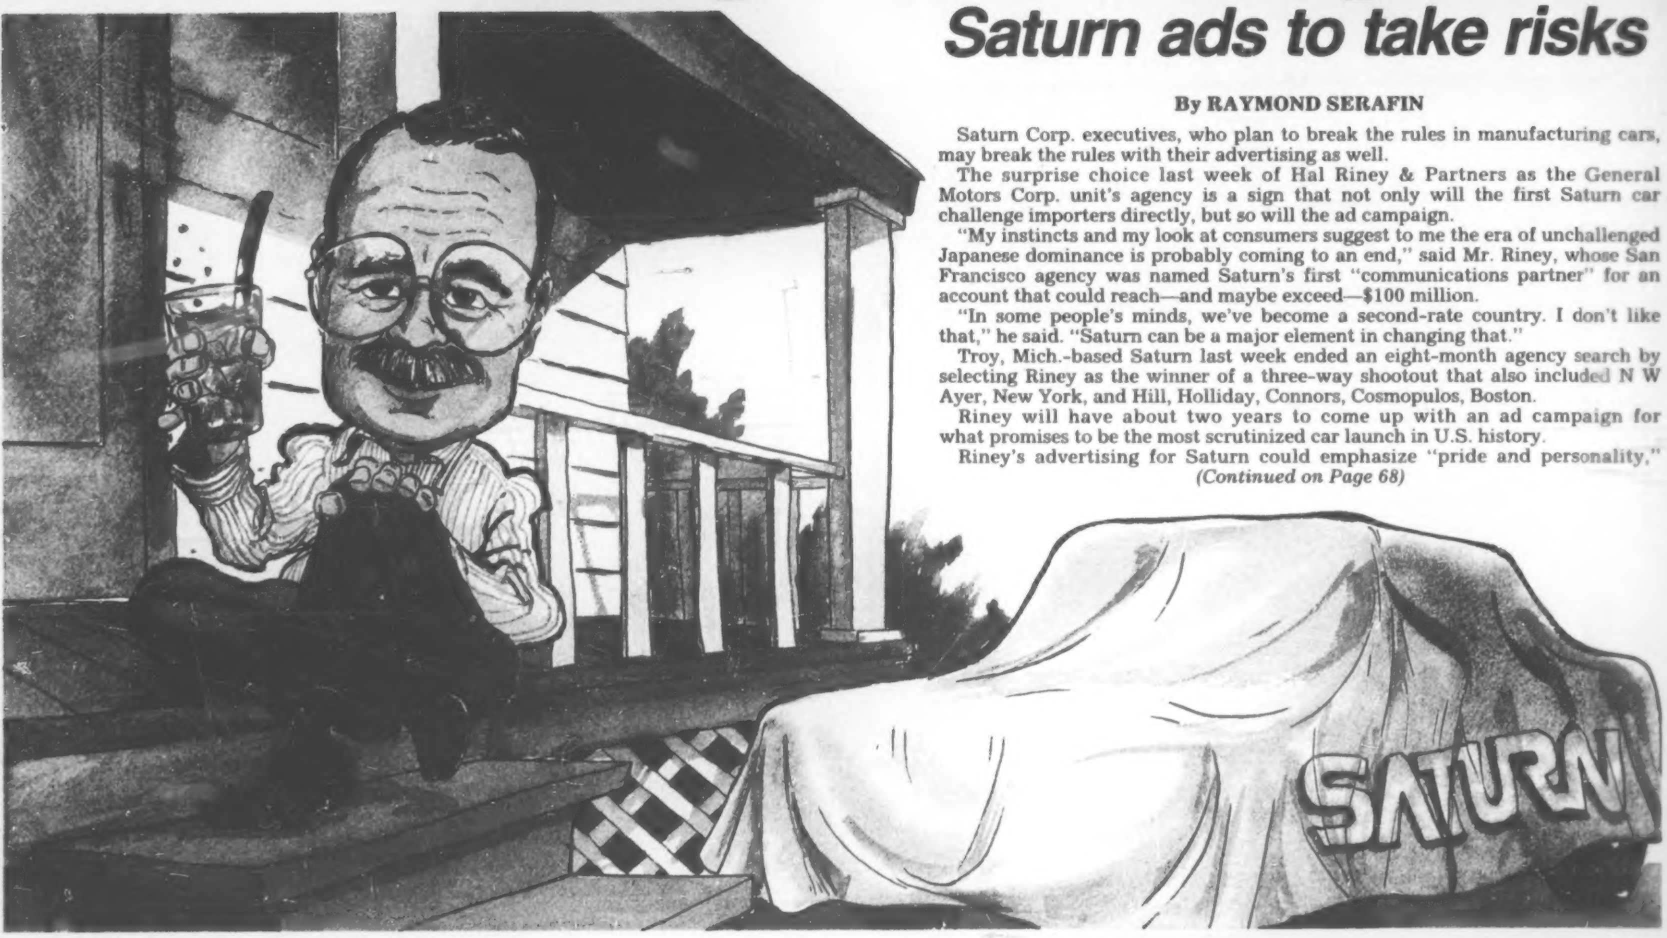

Illustration by Roger Schillerstrom

By RAYMOND SERAFIN

Saturn Corp. executives, who plan to break the rules in manufacturing cars, may break the rules with their advertising as well.

The surprise choice last week of Hal Riney & Partners as the General Motors Corp. unit's agency is a sign that not only will the first Saturn car challenge importers directly, but so will the ad campaign.

"My instincts and my look at consumers suggest to me the era of unchallenged Japanese dominance is probably coming to an end," said Mr. Riney, whose San Francisco agency was named Saturn's first "communications partner" for an account that could reach—and maybe exceed—$100 million.

"In some people's minds, we've become a second-rate country. I don't like that," he said. "Saturn can be a major element in changing that."

Troy, Mich.-based Saturn last week ended an eight-month agency search by selecting Riney as the winner of a three-way shootout that also included N W Ayer, New York, and Hill, Holliday, Connors, Cosmopulos, Boston.

Riney will have about two years to come up with an ad campaign for what promises to be the most scrutinized car launch in U.S. history.

Riney's advertising for Saturn could emphasize "pride and personality,"

Saturn win means big changes

Riney culture shock?

When the first Saturn cars roll off the assembly line next year, Riney's billings will grow an estimated 65% from its current $150 million, spread among offices in Chicago, Los Angeles, New York and San Francisco.

By then, the agency will have gradually added at least 50 new staffers in its creative, media and research departments to meet the challenge of launching the first new-car brand for General Motors Corp. since 1919.

Although Riney's billings remain medium-size by most national standards, the Saturn account will cause the agency to quickly evolve into a truly full-service operation by forcing new strengths in account service,

Bill seeks paid anti-drug ads

By STEVEN W. COLFORD

Two senior U.S. senators want the federal government to mount a $225 million paid ad campaign against drug abuse.

Legislation to create the campaign, co-sponsored last week by Sens. Ernest Hollings (D., S.C.) and John Danforth (R., Mo.), generated immediate controversy.

Ad industry officials warned that the three-year, $75 million-a-year federal ad project could snuff out the advertising and media industry's much-acclaimed public service campaign against drug abuse.

TV industry officials are upset because the plan would extend federal law that now applies only to political campaign advertising to another type of government advertising.

The Senate bill would require TV broadcasters to make time available for sale to the government anti-drug campaign, as they must for federal political candidates, and to price it under the same "lowest-unit-rate" price formula that applies to ad time bought by candidates for federal office.

The formula ensures that candidates get the rate TV stations offer to their best customers.

The legislation will be considered by the Senate Commerce Committee, where Sen. Hollings is chairman and Sen. Danforth is the ranking Republican.

The senators' Television & Radio Advertising Act would create a five-person panel, including two media or advertising experts, to run the campaign. The panel would oversee the hiring of an agency and development of creative and media placement.

The anti-drug campaign would be the biggest new government ad program since the all-volunteer armed services effort switched to paid advertising from public service more than a decade ago.

American Association of Advertising Agencies Exec VP John O'Toole expressed "grave concerns" about the impact such a paid government campaign would have on existing public service ads, particu-

But '92 deal restricts who can buy time

CBS grabs Olympics

By PATRICK McGEEHAN

NEW YORK—CBS faces major hurdles in selling airtime on the 1992 Winter Olympics Games, after paying $243 million for TV rights.

The contract CBS signed last week for rights to telecast its first Olympic Games in 28 years requires the network to give some official U.S. Olympic Committee sponsors first crack at category exclusivity.

The exclusivity requirement could keep CBS from offering a single advertiser exclusivity in a category if an official sponsor buys only a portion of time in that category. For example, if Miller Brewing approaches CBS requesting exclusivity in the beer category, the network would be unable to do it if Anheuser-Busch is a USOC sponsor.

In opting out, ABC cited contract language that "erodes the ability of the network to protect its TV sponsors" as a reason for pulling out of the bidding two days before it began. ABC is believed to have promised its Winter Games advertisers this year first option on time in future Olympics it carried.

The change was made so companies that buy official sponsorships in major categories from the U.S. Olympic Committee will not get shut out, so they get first crack at negotiating for time on CBS (see related story on Page 48).

In 1984, Fuji Photo Film was shut out when it was the official film sponsor of the Los Angeles Olympics because rival Eastman Kodak Co. bought TV exclusivity.

Although agency media executives joined ABC in saying the contract changes will make selling time more difficult, CBS Sports President Neal Pilson downplayed the difficulty in selling time to advertisers on the Olympics. "We made the judgment they would not impact in any way our ability to sell," he said.

The CBS contract to telecast the Games, to be held in Albertville, France, also restricts the use of Olympic logos in print advertising by companies that buy time on the Games but are not official USOC sponsors.

Sun Country told to cool off

Nets balk at steamy ads

By PATRICIA WINTERS

Canandaigua Wine Co.'s steamy new Sun Country wine cooler campaign is too hot for ABC and CBS.

The two TV networks won't run the spots, themed "The hotter cooler," until three sexy scenes are cut out, the company said.

The spots, already airing on syndicated TV shows in local markets and on MTV: Music Television, feature fast cuts of bare-chested men and leggy women in suggestive poses cooling off from the heat either by drinking the cooler or pouring it on themselves.

Original rock music and chants of "hot, hot; cool, cool" precede the tagline "Open it up and pour it on."

The campaign, which broke early this month, was created by Towne, Silverstein, Rotter, New York.

ABC and CBS objected to three scenes: a woman in a teddy and cowboy boots, a woman whose dress is blown upward revealing her panties and a man lifting up a woman in a sensual pose, said Steve Stetzer, Canandaigua assistant marketing-ad director.

The two networks found those scenes too racy, but NBC didn't object, he said.

The agency will edit those scenes from the 30-second spots and replace them with other footage. The edited spots will air on ABC and CBS, while the originals will air on NBC and other media.

"If it was for a cosmetic, I don't think they'd find a problem [with the spots]," Mr. Stetzer said. "I think they're concerned because it's for an alcoholic beverage."

He said the spots deliberately were created to stir the emotions as a way to cut through the clutter of wine cooler advertising.

"We don't have the dollars of a

Visa, AmEx scuffle over ad claims

By JUDITH GRAHAM

Visa International and American Express Co. are escalating attacks on each other's advertising.

The level of allegations about misleading advertising has been unusually high recently, and the Big 3 TV networks have been dragged into the fray.

In the latest development, Visa is planning to alter a spot in its recent Gold Card campaign because of complaints brought to the networks by rival American Express Travel Related Services Co.

CBS and NBC are reviewing the challenge to see whether any further changes are warranted; ABC acknowledged receipt of the complaint but declined comment.

AmEx's gripe with Visa centers on several claims in a 30-second commercial set in Zurmatt, Switzerland, which broke on cable TV the first week of April via BBDO Worldwide, New York. The spot is part of Visa's new Gold Card campaign.

The most serious charge brought by AmEx was that Visa is unable to deliver the emergency services described in the spot, which claims immediate replacement of lost cards and delivery of emergency cash. The spot also claims that AmEx can't deliver similar services in Zurmatt.

AmEx's charge is based on information supplied by an employee, who tested his Citibank Visa card's services in Zurmatt.

In an affidavit submitted to the networks, he claimed he reported his Visa card lost and tried to get a replacement. He said he contacted several Swiss banks and Citibank's South Dakota-based operations, but could not arrange to get either a replacement card or emergency cash.

Although the networks appeared concerned that the spot was flawed, Visa denied the commercial presented a major problem.

"AmEx didn't call the right [phone] number" for Europe Assist, which manages Visa's emergency network abroad, said Jan Soderstrom, Visa's VP-advertising and marketing communications.

To clarify the matter, Visa is voluntarily adding Europe Assist's toll-free number to the end of the Zurmatt commercial.

AmEx and Visa have been at odds over the Zurmatt spot for almost two months. In early April, immediately after the campaign was launched, AmEx brought its first challenge.

It initially objected to a claim that AmEx customers need to travel 100 miles to Lausanne, Switzerland, to receive replacement cards or emergency cash. AmEx argued those services are available in Zurmatt.

That surprised Visa, which said it checked the accuracy of its claim and contended that AmEx initiated the services in Zurmatt only after the Visa commercial aired.

Not true, according to AmEx. "We have always been able to replace an AmEx card in Zurmatt within 24 hours," said Nancy Muller, VP-communications.

While AmEx's delivery of emergency cash "was not as strong," the company has since improved that service, she said.

Although the Zurmatt spot was pulled from Cable News Network for about a week in April, Visa made slight modifications in its description of AmEx's services that allowed it to go back on the air. Now, in addition to including Europe Assist's phone number, it's considering other slight alterations regarding the AmEx charges, but Ms. Soderstrom declined to elaborate.

Well before this latest exchange, Visa had its own ax to grind with AmEx's "Membership has its privileges" TV campaign, which broke in March 1987 via Ogilvy & Mather.

Visa objected to claims in several spots that AmEx offers "no preset spending limit." Visa argued that AmEx does limit authorized spending, and AmEx later added a line to the spot stating, "Approval based on account experience and resources."

Visa also contended that one AmEx spot describing AmEx's benefits was misleading.

In the commercial, a man in a hotel realizes that he's left his prescription at home, dials up AmEx and is reassured that the company can help. During the scene, a helicopter suddenly appears outside the hotel window.

Visa claimed the scene went too far in implying immediate delivery of services. AmEx later deleted the helicopter from the commercial.

AmEx took the campaign off the air in the late fall, when it started running a set of commercials for its new "Purchase Protection" benefit, and recently began running the spots again.#

Burger, beer campaigns turn heads

By SCOTT HUME

April proved to be the kindest month for a pair of high-profile ad campaigns, as Burger King Corp. and IBM Corp. showed strong rebounds in top-of-mind awareness.

It also was surprisingly kind to Stroh Brewery Co., which last month for the first time placed among the top 10 advertisers in ADVERTISING AGE's monthly adWatch survey of consumer ad awareness.

When 1,000 respondents were asked which advertising came to mind first from all they had seen, heard or read in the previous 30 days, Stroh ranked eighth.

That placed it right behind Anheuser-Busch's more heavily advertised Budweiser/Bud Light tandem and ahead of the 10th-ranked Miller Brewing Co. trio (Miller Genuine Draft, Miller High Life and Miller Lite).

Credit for Stroh's appearance probably should belong to the return of beer-loving Alex the Dog, including one commercial in which the pooch performs "impersonations" of such famous dogs as Rin Tin Tin and rival Bud Light's Spuds MacKenzie.

Overall, the best-recalled advertising of the month was Pepsi-Cola's latest, which features superstar Michael Jackson.

His talents may have cost Pepsi a bundle, but he put the brand's advertising back at the top of the heap for the first time since August.

In descending order, the top 10 in top-of-mind awareness in April were Pepsi-Cola, Ford, Coca-Cola, the Caifornia Raisin Advisory Board, Chevrolet, McDonald's Corp., Budweiser/Bud Light, Stroh, Procter & Gamble Co.'s Tide and, tied for 10th, Miller/Miller Lite and political advertising.

The most startling change came in the category of computer advertising.

Last month, 24.5% of the adults surveyed said IBM's advertising was the first computer advertising that came to mind, up 6.8 percentage points from IBM's 17.7% share of first mentions in the March survey.

That wasn't quite enough to overtake Apple Computer, which received 26.7% of first mentions, but it was IBM's best adWatch showing in several years and pulled it closer to Apple than the company has been since the January 1987 survey.

IBM's advertising recently has been augmented by the addition of Alan Alda (AA, Feb. 22), reuniting him with other past cast members from "M*A*S*H" who had been appearing in IBM advertising for the past several months.

Ranking third among the computer advertisers was Radio Shack, with 3.3% of first mentions.

The agency responsible for IBM's advertising is Lord, Geller, Federico, Einstein, New York, which has been making news recently for everything but its creative product.

Many of the agency's staff who worked on IBM have since moved to breakaway agency Lord Einstein O'Neill & Partners, raising the possibility that IBM ultimately will move the account elsewhere.

Another ad campaign that has been the focus of much attention and controversy has been N W Ayer's "We do it like you'd do it" campaign for Burger King.

That campaign, Ayer's first after assuming the $200 million account from J. Walter Thompson USA last summer, began Feb. 29. The initial reaction was negative: BK's share of recall of fast-food advertising declined after the campaign began (AA, April 25).

However, aided by a shift in marketing strategy, BK's advertising rebounded last month.

Its advertising got 16.1% of first mentions in the April survey, up 3.7 points from March and a better score than it had received since October.

Early in April, BK shifted the ad focus to include the comparative claim that its Whopper sandwich was preferred over McDonald's Big Mac in national taste tests (AA, April 11).

McDonald's continued its uninterrupted reign as best-recalled fast-food advertiser with 46.1% of first mentions in April. Wendy's International held the No. 3 slot with a 6.5% share for its "Hamburger A, Hamburger B" campaign.

AdWatch is a joint project of ADVERTISING AGE and SRI Research Center, Lincoln, Neb.

Advertising awareness is measured by asking a nationally projectible sample of people to name the first advertising that comes to mind overall and in specific product categories.

In other significant changes in last month's survey:

- General Motors Corp.'s Chevrolet lost ground in its battle to unseat recall-leader Ford in the cars and trucks category. Chevy's "Heartbeat of America" campaign came to mind first for 14.7% of respondents, down from 16.8% in March.

Ford got 21.9% of first mentions, up slightly from 21% the previous month. Third-place Toyota Motor Sales USA rose to 7.5% from 5.7% in March.

- Alpo took a better than 2-to-1 leadership position in the pet food category last month. Alpo's advertising came to mind first for 10.6% of the sample, up from 8.2% in March. No. 2 Kal Kan dropped to 4.8% from 6.8%. That tied it with Star-Kist Foods' 9-Lives, which rose to 4.8% in April from 3.2% the month before.#

IBM pulling the plug

Agency review under way for $138 million account

By GARY LEVIN
and JON LAFAYETTE

IBM Corp. put its entire $138 million account up for review June 3, saying it will split the business among several agencies.

That follows a legal feud that appears to be turning the company away from both its main U.S. agencies.

IBM's move will add to the woes of Lord, Geller, Federico, Einstein while possibly bolstering the agency's lawsuit against Lord Einstein O'Neill & Partners, formed last March by six top Lord Geller executives who broke away. Lord Geller's problems could help the agency show damages.

The suit, filed by Lord Geller parent WPP Group and its chief executive, Martin Sorrell, charges the former executives with a conspiracy to sabotage their former agency.

The review apparently was initiated by top-level IBM executives who believed last week's disclosure of confidential testimony marked the "last straw" in its continuing frustration over its involvement in the lawsuit.

Although IBM wouldn't specify the number of agencies it will meet with, sources said a company task force has developed a list of fewer than 10 agencies, from which it will choose two or three to handle various assignments.

The assignments include IBM's corporate group and its marketing and services group, which likely will be broken down by product categories, such as copiers, personal computers, typewriters and other products.

The company is said to have set a July deadline for its agency decision. IBM said Lord Geller will be included in the review and expects it "will continue as one of the company's advertising agencies."

Former IBM shops and other agencies are lining up to get a piece of the lucrative business. DDB Needham Worldwide and Geer, DuBois are known to have courted IBM officials in the weeks since the lawsuit was filed, and some executives, who asked not to be identified, reported being told casually by IBM officials that "we might see you soon."

However, DDB Needham's sister agency, BBDO Worldwide, handles Apple Computer and that could be a conflict.

Sources said prospects for several other agencies are bright. Interpublic Group of Cos.' Lintas:Worldwide has no apparent conflicts, and its recent purchase of Muir Cornelius Moore, a major IBM sales-promotion agency, provides

Upfront market draws bleak forecast for nets

By VERNE GAY

New York—Sales for the 1988-89 prime-time TV season are expected to be off by as much as $400 million when this year's upfront market kicks off this month.

If this 15% drop from last year's record $3.1 billion in upfront sales holds up, it would be only the second time in a decade that sales in the key selling period declined from the previous year.

In the upfront market, the networks sell part of their commercial inventory as much as 52 weeks in advance. Reduced early sales could affect pricing for a long time.

While the Big 3 networks are floating suggestions that prices will increase about 8% to 9%, advertisers are saying prices will end up flat or, at most, about 5% higher than last year's levels. Last year, prices increased by as much as 30% from 1986.

National advertisers buy anywhere from a third to half of all their network TV time for the coming broadcast year in upfront. They do this to get lower prices than they could get in the scatter market and to get guarantees or assurances that purchased ratings levels will be met.

Scatter refers to the sell-off of remaining time after the TV season has begun.

This year, according to an ABC survey, about 125 advertisers will enter the upfront market, down 100, or 44%, from the year before.

ABC also found that of the 80 advertisers surveyed, 42 said their budgets would increase and 40 said their budgets would decrease.

One of the reasons for the likely upfront softness this year is that smaller advertisers that bought upfront last summer to escape high scatter prices aren't expected to return to the market this year.

Another reason cited by agency and network sources is that many major advertisers overbought last year because of uncertainties caused by the transition to peo-

TV makers zap price-cutters

By IRA TEINOWITZ

Two leading consumer-electronics marketers will unleash a multimillion-dollar weapon in their fight to halt the downward spiral of TV and videocassette recorder prices: their co-op advertising budgets.

Zenith Electronics Corp. and Thomson Consumer Electronics Corp., barred from setting prices by federal law, will use the force of their co-op programs to try to keep retailers from discounting their products.

Their announcement was made on the eve of the Summer Consumer Electronics Show, which started June 4 in Chicago.

At Thomson, which now owns the GE and RCA brands, retailers face being disqualified from the co-op program for up to 90 days if their ads for RCA's top ColorTrak line list prices below company minimums. (Thomson doesn't offer co-op advertising on the GE brand.)

Zenith's program is somewhat less harsh but more encompassing. Zenith is setting minimum advertised prices for every one of its camcorders, TVs and VCRs. Retailers won't be reimbursed for any advertising that cites prices below those minimums.

"For too long, leading manufacturers like Zenith have been prepaying the electric bill while we sat in the electric chair and some retailers pulled the switch," said Gerald M. McCarthy, president of Zenith Sales Co. "Our new policies and programs should give Zenith and its distributors more control.

"We will no longer subsidize those retailers who advertise the most desired brand name in the business at ridiculously low prices just to draw customers into their stores to sell lesser-quality off-brand products."

At Thomson, Frank McCann, public relations manager, said the steps are necessary to preserve RCA's quality image.

It's believed that Zenith and Thomson's actions could be adopted by marketers in other product categories.

Television Digest estimates that for the year ended last June, GE and RCA combined for about 24% of the 19 million TV sets sold while Zenith accounted for 14.5%.

Consumer electronics marketers are estimated to spend more than $250 million on measured media advertising. Their co-op spending is believed to equal or exceed that, according to Frank Hennessey, VP-sales for the Newspaper Advertising Bureau.

Zenith last year spent about $8 million in measured media for consumer products.

While taking a hard line with retailers, Zenith is taking a hard look at getting out of the consumer electronics field altogether.

Zenith last week acknowledged that it's holding discussions with unnamed companies about a possibie sale of its electronics lines. "We are exploring all our options and are unlimited in perspective of what we are willing to look at," said President Jerry K. Pearlman.

Zenith cited cost pressures that have hampered the profit picture for consumer electronics marketers in its fight against what it considers to be bait-and-switch tactics in the marketplace.

Zenith is to unveil a new ad campaign later this year from Foote, Cone & Belding, Chicago. Company officials said the new campaign will keep "The quality goes in before the name goes on" tag.

Thomson, which is unveiling its first GE and RCA products since buying the consumer electronics line from General Electric Co. last year, this fall will introduce a line of upscale TVs, Dimensia by RCA. The line will be backed by separate advertising. Ammirati & Puris, New York, handles Dimensia, GE and RCA for Thomson.#

Paid anti-drug ads opposed

By STEVEN W. COLFORD

Ad industry representatives this week hope to convince two lawmakers that their proposal for a $225 million, paid anti-drug campaign should be repackaged to avoid undercutting the industry's own multimillion-dollar effort.

At stake is the future of the 16-month-old Media-Advertising Partnership for a Drug-Free America, said John O'Toole, exec VP of the American Association of Advertising Agencies.

The partnership is a joint, pro bono effort of advertisers, agencies and media that has garnered about $150 million in free time and space for its highly acclaimed anti-drug campaign in its first year.

If that campaign, originally estimated at $1.5 billion over three years, has to compete with a paid, federally funded campaign, it would spell the end of the partnership, Mr. O'Toole said.

"There's an old axiom dating as far back as the world's oldest profession that says you don't give away something you can charge for," Mr. O'Toole said, adding that agencies wouldn't volunteer their services if a rival agency were getting paid to handle a similar campaign.

And, he said, broadcasters would opt to sell time for the government's anti-drug messages rather than donate time for the partnership's effort.

The partnership's Lynn Mapes and Executive Director Tom Hedrick have already discussed their concerns with representatives of the bill's sponsors, Sens. John Danforth (R., Mo.) and Ernest Hollings (D., S.C.).

But it's not easy persuading lawmakers, particularly in an election year, to back away from legislation addressing what's widely regarded as the U.S.' foremost issue of concern.

Mr. O'Toole has suggested that the senators redirect any federal funds appropriated for the bill to buy network time for an anti-drug telethon.

Another alternative suggested by Mr. Mapes, former VP-associate publisher at Reader's Digest, is to apply the federal funds to research or outdoor ads.

"We're all on the same side on this issue," said Mr. Mapes, who hopes to meet this week with Sen. Danforth or his representatives.

The Danforth-Hollings proposal likely will be considered by the Senate telecommunications subcommittee by the end of the month, a congressional committee aide said.

"If it [the proposal] needs to be adjusted to complement the other effort, it will be," the aide said. "There is no intention of undercutting what's already being done."#

Nabisco's rebuilding puzzles its agencies

By JUDANN DAGNOLI

Nabisco Brands' restructuring into four operating companies, coming on the heels of its reassignment of $120 million in advertising, leaves the ad agencies wondering how they'll be affected.

The revamp essentially broke Nabisco's U.S. business into Nabisco Biscuit Co. and Nabisco Foods Co. Its international units now are International Nabisco Brands, London, and Nabisco Brands, Toronto.

Parent RJR Nabisco earlier had spun off Del Monte Foods as a separate operating company.

"To be honest, it's kind of a mystery as to why they reorganized," said one Nabisco agency executive who asked not to be identified.

He said Nabisco told its agencies that no accounts will be shuffled as a result of the reorganization and that agencies won't be directly affected.

Ad agencies, however, will now report to different people. The agency source said the marketing executives at Nabisco believe the impact for the shops is that "they have a new boss, that's all."

With the reorganization, Ellen Marram, 41, and William McKnight, 43, essentially switch jobs, as earlier reported (AA, May 30). Ms. Marram, who had been president of the grocery division, was named president of Nabisco Biscuit, while Mr. McKnight moves to president-ceo of Nabisco Foods from president of what was the biscuit division.

Ms. Marram, however, won't be

How much is Saturn really worth?

By RAYMOND SERAFIN

Maybe Saturn Corp. won't bill $100 million.

In the aftermath of Hal Riney & Partners winning the biggest new account of the year, it still isn't clear how much the business is worth.

The General Motors Corp. subsidiary has never acknowledged the widely published $100 million figure and still doesn't.

Thomas Shaver, Saturn Corp.'s director of marketing services, said the company soon will start putting together an ad budget and will ask its new San Francisco-based agency for its recommendations.

Mr. Riney himself acknowledged that the billings figure may be off. A few hours after Saturn named Riney as its first agency, the shop's chairman-ceo was asked to estimate how much it will spend on advertising.

"We don't know what the billings are going to be," he said. "We're praying that they'll be immense."

In fact, it may be several years before Saturn's factory ad spending reaches $100 million. And when that happens, it's possible Riney won't be doing the media buying, a factor in determining the final compensation agreement.

Several things suggest billings will grow slowly:

- Media attention focused on Saturn since its inception means there will be scant need to develop brand awareness. Without any advertising, Saturn achieved a name awareness of nearly 40% during its 1985 search for a site for its assembly plant, officials said at the time.

The first Saturn model goes on sale in mid-1990 and will undoubtedly get more media coverage than any car launch ever.

- Initial capacity at Saturn's Spring Hill, Tenn., assembly plant will be 250,000 cars a year; the 500,000 mark won't be reached until 1994 or 1996, officials say.

At 250,000 cars a year, a $100 million ad budget would come out to $400 per vehicle on a car expected to sell for about $10,000. That would compare to a per-car average closer to $200 for GM's other car divisions.

Hyundai Motor America, an importer of small cars made in South Korea, spent an estimated $62 million in 1987—its first full year—and sold 263,610 cars for an average per-car expenditure of about $235 a car. And unlike Saturn, Hyundai started with virtually no brand-name awareness.

- One of the directives GM gave Saturn was to find ways to get costs out of a car through both the manufacturing and marketing, to make U.S. production of small cars a viable, competitive alternative.
- The pay of Saturn workers, managers and union members alike will be linked to a profit-sharing formula. Saturn's management-labor Strategic Action Council might be concerned that overspending on advertising would cut into profits.

Other auto ad industry sources speculate that the account could approach $100 million after the car is available nationally in 1991, but they say that would take into account inflation and sales-promotion work.

However, the business is still big.

The most lucrative aspect could come from handling dealer co-op ad groups, which may spend an estimated $40 million to $50 million a year after Saturn's first model is available nationally.

Recent automotive trends suggest Riney will get those dealer-group accounts. Nissan recently told its dealer associations to consolidate their $65 million business with national agency Chiat/Day, Los Angeles.

While major automakers have been reducing commissions in recent years, with 12% the average current rate, agencies more typically get 15% on dealer group accounts.

Also, at least one Saturn executive believes it would be a major mistake to underspend on advertising. Donald Hudler, VP-sales, service and marketing, said, "If we decided to cut back advertising to put an additional $150 to $200 content in the car, and then find out we need to advertise more, then those dollars will already have been spent and we can't increase the advertising and still be cost-competitive.

"So it would be better for us to be prepared to overspend."#

Breakaway shop sees retail as hot

By KATE FITZGERALD

CHICAGO—The latest breakaway agency, Mass Marketing Inc., may be ready to announce its first client this week.

If it does, the shop created two weeks ago by the four top executives who split off from Saffer/USA could be sending a signal that agencies specializing in retail advertising are in demand.

Saffer Advertising, Toronto, Saffer/USA's parent, is North America's largest retail advertising agency, with about $155 million in annual billings in Canada and here.

A possible target for Mass Marketing is the $7 million Carson Pirie Scott & Co. account that Saffer/USA resigned last month after winning the $10 million Montgomery Ward & Co. business (AA, May 23).

Saffer didn't drop any other retail clients, a sign of the industry's often-loose approach to client conflicts.

Joel Nichols, VP-advertising for Woodward & Lothrop in Washington and the John Wanamaker's chain in Philadelphia, both handled by Saffer, said his company saw no conflict in Saffer's other work.

"Even before the Ward assignment, Saffer was handling advertising for Carson's free standing Corporate Level store here in Washington and that didn't bother us," Mr. Nichols said.

"Frankly," he added, "there aren't many other capable agencies out there."

"The conflict issue is definitely heating up in retailing, but the rules are very unclear still," said Lee Lynch, president of Carmichael Lynch, Minneapolis, which handled broadcast advertising for Minneapolis-based Donaldsons department stores before it was bought by Carson recently.

Gerald Wood, the former president of Saffer/USA and now president of Mass Marketing, wouldn't confirm the new shop is eyeing the Carson account.

Mr. Wood discounted suggestions the agency is in line for the $20 million Long John Silver's Seafood Shoppes' business, resigned recently by Foote, Cone & Belding, Chicago (AA, May 30).

"We're not close to getting either account," said Mr. Wood, but he hinted other clients were in the wings and said he was in the process of hiring up to 30 people.

Carson Public Relations Director Laura Higdon said the company plans to decide on a new agency as soon as possible.

Saffer's ability to beat out incumbent Young & Rubicam and others for Ward suggests the enhanced value of an agency with retail experience.

Mr. Wood and the other executives who followed him out of Saffer/USA—including VPs Cathy Frangos, Drew Herbert and Ron Smith—all have extensive experience in the growing niche of retail advertising, Saffer's specialty. Mass Marketing will be a full-service operation specializing in retail.#

Job hunting? Look overseas

Best bet: Hong Kong market

An Advertising Age roundup

Where in the world are the good agency jobs?

Agency folks with wanderlust and a ready passport should head to Hong Kong, if they have a working knowledge of Cantonese, according to an ADVERTISING AGE survey of 12 countries. But don't bother with Australia—strict immigration laws and a tight job market make it difficult for Americans in that country.

Overall, the survey found that job opportunities do exist overseas for Americans who have a knowledge of foreign languages.

Here's the rundown:

• Australia. The job outlook for the next three years is tough because the industry isn't growing. Furthermore, the immigration laws make it very difficult for local agencies to hire foreigners and for multinationals to use expatriates.

Account directors earn an average of $50,000; copywriters, $55,000; and creative directors, $125,000 to $180,000, said Helen Hill, ceo of Helen Hill & Partners, a Sydney personnel agency.

Salaries for managing directors can range from $125,000 in small agencies to $200,000-plus in larger agencies.

One drawback to working Down Under is the 2-year-old Fringe Benefits Tax, which covers all benefits including cars. Expatriates working for multinationals usually get trips home, and school and housing benefits.

JOB WATCH

• Brazil. While knowledge of Portuguese is not required, good work is.

Art direction is the most open because of a lack of qualified locals.

Creative and managing directors average $156,000 a year; perquisites include a car and driver and one international trip a year. Account directors and copywriters average $39,000 a year. A general manager sometimes gets extra pay or shares in the company.

• Canada. The job market here has been rough on top-of-the-line executives with major agencies since 1982 when about 20% of the staff, most of them executives, at many large Toronto shops was cut due to the economy.

"The market has closed up," said Keith McKerracher, president of the Institute of Canadian Advertising.

Fred Litman, VP at Management One, a Toronto-based head-hunting shop specializing in the advertising and marketing business, said this is good news for free-lance creatives. Free-lancing may be one of the few ways that foreigners can work on Canadian advertising.

In Quebec, French is a prerequisite—even for English accounts—because a great deal of business is conducted in French.

Salaries average about $60,000 to $80,000 for copywriters and $52,000 to $64,000 for account directors; creative directors earn $120,000 to $160,000.

• France. The job market is in a growth-oriented mode. Small shops continue to sprout and prosper, providing jobs for professionals at all levels. Agencies like Boulet Dru Dupuy Petit and Feldman Calleux & Associes, both Paris, are expanding abroad, creating the need for personnel here in management and support roles.

Agencies in general are expected to keep growing as TV advertising develops with commercial channels in France. Direct marketing and sponsorships also are on the rise.

It's possible for foreigners to work in France, but excellent spoken and written French is almost always a must. Salaries average $51,000 for copywriters and $240,000 for creative directors.

• Hong Kong. Unlike many other countries, including the U.S., Hong Kong is begging for good people.

The local Association of Accredited Advertising Agencies is trying to lure back expatriates.

"The shortage is not only costing us more, but it's lowering standards," said Tom Hartje, managing director, DDB Needham International. "We have to give people titles they really don't deserve."

The labor shortage is due in part to Hong Kong's "brain drain" as residents frightened of China's 1997 takeover flee to Australia, Canada and the U.S.

An estimated 98% of advertising in Hong Kong is in Cantonese, so language skills are a necessity.

Account directors earn at the very least between $25,000 and $60,000. Creative directors and managing directors earn between $64,000 and $128,000 a year. Managing directors usually also get housing, a car and driver and paid trips home.

• Japan. There are few jobs for foreign ad executives outside the international agencies, and those openings are few.

Most of the opportunities that do exist in Japanese agencies are for English-language copywriters to work on international campaigns.

Housing is a standard benefit for any foreign employee. A small Western-style apartment in central Tokyo for a family of four now costs about $8,000 a month; a smaller bachelor apartment costs about half that. Japanese-style housing is cheaper but still very costly.

Foreigners not fluent in Japanese, both spoken and written, can make only limited contributions, and increasingly those jobs are filled by foreigners with language skills.

The basic salary for executives with about 10 years experience is $36,000 a year. Each step up in management is accompanied by a salary increase of about $2,400 per year.

Similar increments are paid for dependent children. Also there are summer bonuses of $8,000 and yearend bonuses of $8,100. Workers are guaranteed lifetime employment.

Some possible drawbacks are that promotions are by age rather than merit and there are very few holidays.

• Mexico. It's not easy for foreigners to find jobs here because of government work permit requirements, and Spanish is necessary.

Mexico's high inflation has put a damper on the job market in general, and agencies are reducing staff.

Upper-level employees can expect some fringe benefits, such as an automobile and yearend bonus.

Managing directors often get a chauffeur, rental assistance and country club membership as well.

• Spain. Salaries in Spain often vary by as much as 200% for the same positions.

Creative directors' annual income varies from $90,000 to $225,000. Managing directors can expect gross salaries of $90,000 to $180,000; account directors, between $62,000 and $107,000; and art directors and copywriters, between $53,000 and $99,000.

Spain's ad industry is somewhat open to foreigners in the art and graphic design areas. Account director posts are easy to find if perfect Spanish is spoken.

• South Africa. These are lean years for advertising, but ad spending is picking up now for the first time in four years.

"There is a shortage of people after the long hard years when many left the industry or emigrated," said Peter de Klerk, executive director at the Association of

Xerox redirects its fax efforts

By JUDITH GRAHAM

Xerox Corp. has repositioned its facsimile machine business and introduced a new line of machines in an aggressive move to capture a larger share of this exploding market.

The new positioning stresses the reliability of Xerox's machines and backs the claim with a $5 customer guarantee. Any customer whose fax transmissions fail to arrive at their ultimate destinations will get $5, up to a limit of 20 transmissions per machine during the first year of service.

Print advertising supporting the guarantee breaks early this month in business and trade publications, said Madigan Pratt, senior VP-management supervisor at Lowe Marschalk, New York, the agency for Xerox's fax products.

This year, all fax sales are projected to soar to 700,000 units, more than triple the 200,000 units in 1986. Ad spending is also booming, reaching $20 million industrywide in 1987 and expected to rise substantially this year.

Meanwhile, Xerox has introduced a new line of thermal paper fax machines designed to appeal to the booming small-business market. The machines, which cost about $2,000, have become the market standard during the past several years.

Xerox previously produced only cut-sheet, plain-paper machines, which cost about $3,500 and can be used with any type of paper. But the company misjudged its market, placing too much emphasis on the quality and convenience of its machines and too little emphasis on price.

Once a leader in the fax industry, Xerox has steadily lost market share since the late 1970s, when competitors started introducing lower-price products.

Today, Sharp Electronics Corp. and its foreign competitors, Canon and Ricoh Corp., are the leaders in the fragmented industry, but no single company dominates the field.

The first ad in Xerox's current campaign, launched May 17, carried the headline "Did you send the Fax? Yes. Did they get it?" Instead of an answer, a 4-inch blank leaves the question open. Copy at the bottom of the ad assures customers their Xerox faxes will be received.

"Market research showed that the one thing customers really care about is whether their documents actually get there or not," Mr. Pratt said.

Direct-mail support is planned this fall.

Xerox's previous fax advertising stressed the advantages of its cut-sheet, plain-paper machines—particularly their ability to use any type of paper and make high-quality reproductions. But the company decided to change its approach when research revealed that customers were basically satisfied with less flexible machines that made poorer-quality copies.#

Jobs around the world

Ad Agencies.

As for foreigners taking these positions, "there has been very little so far," said Alison Knight, of the Connection, a leading ad agency employment service.

Though Ms. Knight said she gets many inquiries from foreigners, there's been no rush because of the country's political status.

An experienced account director commands a salary package worth $40,000 to $60,000. A copywriter earns, on the average, $22,500, but an experienced one can get as much as $60,000.

Tax rates here are high—50%—so tax-exempt or partially exempt remuneration is important.

- South Korea. Salaries aren't high here, but when it comes to perks, South Korean agencies can really pour it on. And the job market is booming due to a fast rise in ad spending.

A managing director can expect just $19,000 to $32,000—and a chauffeur-driven car. A generous entertainment allowance—averaging $15,000—is almost standard because custom demands lavish dinner parties to win and hold onto clients.

All agency employees can expect bonuses of 40% to 60% of their annual salaries.

Top creative and account directors with the top agencies are paid about $15,000. At second-tier agencies, the pay for copywriters, account directors and creatives with five or more years experience starts at just under $10,000.

JOB WATCH

As for foreigners landing a job with a Korean agency, "it's not so easy but it's possible," said one account director with Daehong Advertising, a Saatchi & Saatchi affiliate in Seoul.

Skill in the local language helps but is not mandatory.

- U.K. An American in London looking for a job in advertising would be very unlikely to get permission to work.

Americans are usually transferred to London to fill specific jobs such as international account handling.

Like Spain, salaries vary enormously. Differences in pay can extend to 100% or more for people with similar experience a[illegible]ponsibilities.

According to recruitment a[illegible]cies and management consultancies, the average salary for a copywriter in London is between $36,000 and $54,000. A creative director at a small or midsize shop would get $42,000 to $72,000, while the same position in a top agency could easily top $180,000.

Last year a survey by Taylor Bennett, a London-based recruitment agency, found account directors with four years experience earned $32,000, which rose to $70,000 after nine years experience. Perks include a company car, private health insurance, pension plan and expenses for home entertainment, fuel and parking fees.

Prospects for job seekers are good for the next three years as the ad industry is expected to continue its high growth rate into the 1990s.

- West Germany. Growth in the ad industry, combined with a lack of qualified personnel, have opened the market in West Germany.

Last year, the number of open positions industrywide increased 12%. A recent survey indicates copywriters and trainees account for the majority of open positions. Demand has slackened for directors, producers and media experts.

Germany has a limited need for foreign talent. "It's restrictive," said Ute Hirschbiegel, head of Service Advertising Agency and one of the country's leading ad consultants. A work permit for citizens from within the European Economic Commission countries is easier to obtain than for outside.

Low salaries aren't a reason for the lack of qualified personnel. An account director earns between $120,000 and $210,000. A copywriter can earn between $48,000 and $84,000. Top positions like creative director start at $210,000. Benefits include a car, an apartment, health insurance and six weeks paid vacation.#

Cable steals upfront show from TV nets

By WAYNE WALLEY

Cable TV ad sales for the fall season are taking off in the face of a probable soft upfront market for the Big 3 broadcast networks.

Advertisers already are setting aside specific budgets for cable programs and buying time farther in advance because of increased demand, creating a de facto cable upfront selling season for the first time.

Total cable ad revenues are expected to reach $1.45 billion in 1988, a 24% increase over last year, with cable network billings exceeding $1 billion for the first time, said Paul Kagan Associates.

While cable is headed for a banner year, the Big 3 face a 15% drop from last year's record $3.1 billion in advance ad sales for the season beginning this fall (AA, June 6).

"This means advertisers might finally be sold on cable's value as a medium," said Doug McCormick, VP-advertising sales, Lifetime Cabletelevision Network.

"Advertisers used to look to cable as an alternative only if broadcast inventory was tight or too expensive. Now more advertisers are familiar with cable and we don't have to rely on a strong broadcast market," he said.

Unlike broadcast, MTV Networks projects a 30% increase in fourth-quarter ad sales for MTV: Music Television, Nickelodeon/Nick at Nite and VH-1: Video Hits One.

Besieged giant eyes two-level review

IBM moves quickly

By GARY LEVIN
and JON LAFAYETTE

IBM Corp. has approached at least eight ad agencies for what will probably be a two-tier split of its $138 million account.

Big Blue apparently plans to put its corporate, personal computer and business-to-business advertising at a major top-level agency, and specific product assignments at one or more midsize shops.

Sources indicate IBM has said all the agencies in the review must bill a minimum of $200 million to compete.

The marketer has contacted D'Arcy Masius Benton & Bowles, DDB Needham Worldwide, Lintas:Worldwide and Wells, Rich, Greene, all New York. One of these agencies is expected to be named to handle the bulk of IBM's business, mostly those assignments now at Lord, Geller, Federico, Einstein.

IBM also has begun to sound out midsize agencies with creative reputations, apparently to handle specific product assignments.

Two or three of these agencies are expected to be assigned projects with billings of about $20 million to $30 million.

Among the shops approached about these assignments are Jordan, McGrath, Case & Taylor; Levine, Huntley, Schmidt & Beaver; Lois Pitts Gershon Pon/GGK; and TBWA. TBWA, which works on Bull computers in eight European countries, may not participate in the review.

IBM told several shops, including Ammirati & Puris and Geer, DuBois, that they were "too small" for an assignment.

But Saatchi & Saatchi DFS, widely expected to contend for the IBM business, appears to have been left out of the review.

Agency officials were surprised and at a loss to explain it. They'd expected to be included because the agency handles some IBM collateral work in the U.S. for the company's Information Systems Group. Saatchi also has made development of a closer relationship with the Big Blue a corporate priority.

It was Saatchi's second recent negative signal from IBM. Lois

WCRS boosts name in U.S.

By JON LAFAYETTE

New York—The merger of Della Femina, Travisano & Partners and HBM/Creamer is just the beginning of WCRS Group's designs on the U.S. market.

"Don't think our ambitions have stopped," Tim Breene, deputy group chief executive of London-based WCRS, said as the creation of the nation's 18th-largest agency was disclosed last week. "We continue to talk about other things."

Della Femina, McNamee WCRS, as the agency will be called, will bill $800 million.

Mr. Breene, who's also chief executive of WRCS' North American operations, maintained that speculation regarding negotiations for WCRS to buy Chicago-based Tatham-Laird & Kudner was "no more or less true than it ever has been."

But Jerry Della Femina, chairman-ceo of Della Femina, McNamee, said strengthening the U.S. agency's Chicago presence is "the next move they [WCRS] should be making."

Louise McNamee, president-chief operating officer of Della Femina, will hold the same title at the combined agency. She will be responsible for the former HBM/Creamer offices in Boston and Pittsburgh and the Della Femina office in Los Angeles.

Edward Eskandarian, who'd been chairman-ceo of HBM in Boston, will be a vice chairman of the new agency, as will William Sprague, who'd been chairman-ceo of HBM in Pittsburgh. They stay in their current cities.

Robert A. Becker Co., a medical specialist bought by WCRS in 1987, will be a part of the new agency, while the Creamer Dickson Basford public relations unit will stay separate, reporting to WCRS' Mr. Breene.

Mr. Della Femina said he expects the agency's top 20 ranking to help it compete for new business. He said 75% of the accounts worth $20 million or more are won by agencies in the top 25.

Because of the merger, the agency resigned two HBM/Creamer clients: the $4 million-to-$5 million Molson Light account, a conflict with the Beck's beer account handled by Della Femina, and the $2 million-to-$2.5 million New England Subaru Dealers account, which conflicts with Della Femina's American Isuzu Motors account.

Despite the merger, Ms. McNamee said the offices will continue to operate autonomously of each other for the most part.

Mr. Eskandarian said he was pleased with the merger, [illegible] HBM name, to see it disappear.

WCRS, which bought Della Femina and HBM/Creamer in 1986, had resisted consolidating the two, preferring a loose confederation of agencies to the worldwide monoliths other companies have created. It had also resisted changing the agencies' names.

But adding the WCRS name is expected to boost its profile with multinational advertisers. Mr. Breene said the WCRS "brand" has a single-digit recall rate among marketers in the U.S.

WCRS agencies in other countries—WCRS Mathews Marcantonio in London, Belier/WCRS in Europe and the Ball Partnership in Asia—are ranked among the top 15 in their markets.#

How JWT won Bell account

By JANET MEYERS and GARY LEVIN

Bell Atlantic Corp.'s consolidation of more than $50 million in ad work at J. Walter Thompson USA is an example of the critical role personal loyalties play in gaining new business.

Those loyalties, built up by JWT over the years with Bell Atlantic's key executives, played a major role in the agency's coup, which gives it a much-needed boost.

J. Walter Thompson Co. has been struggling to regain momentum following its takeover by WPP Group last year.

Since then, JWT has lost the $200 million Burger King Corp. account and Sears, Roebuck and Co.'s $40 million Discover card account, among others.

JWT officials are most certainly cheering the seeming ease with which they won Bell Atlantic.

Christopher Clouser, the company's VP-corporate relations and advertising since April, was formerly senior VP-corporate relations at US Sprint, a major client of JWT's San Francisco office.

Ed Carter, the Bell Atlantic consultant who ultimately steered the company toward JWT, was previously senior VP-sales and marketing at Sprint.

Chuck Jones, of Chicago's Jones-Lundin Associates, a consultancy, had circulated questionnaires to several agencies. But he later called to tell them the review had been called off.

In reality, sources said, Mr. Jones himself was called off the consulting assignment in favor of Mr. Carter, who quickly struck a deal with JWT Chairman-CEO Burt Manning.

But JWT has two other telecommunications accounts that could pose conflicts with the new assignment.

JWT's San Francisco office still handles Sprint, which has dramatically cut its ad spending from $80 million in 1986 to an estimated $50 million last year.

The other conflict is with Ameri-

Attorneys win big in breakaway fight

By JON LAFAYETTE

New York—Legal fees in WPP Group's lawsuit against six breakaway executives are well into the seven figures, sources estimate.

As WPP Chief Executive Martin Sorrell's lawsuit moves into its 13th week, experts guess that court costs for both sides combined already exceed $1.5 million. WPP charges that the executives who started Lord Einstein O'Neill & Partners tried to sabotage their old agency, WPP's Lord, Geller, Federico, Einstein.

Lord Einstein's law firm, Skadden, Arps, Slate, Meagher & Flom, a giant corporate and takeover specialist, is charging $9,000 to $12,000 per day in court, or about $50,000 a week, said Steven Brill, publisher and editor in chief of The American Lawyer. For the past 12 weeks, Skadden's courtroom bill alone would amount to at least $600,000.

Lewis Eichenholtz, Lord Einstein's senior VP-chief financial officer, said the agency hasn't received a bill yet from its law firm.

Expenses for transcripts, messengers, secretarial overtime, documents, meals, phone calls and cab rides could add another 20% to a law firm's tab.

Young & Rubicam's counsel, Shearman & Sterling, is costing $6,000 to $7,000 a day, for a total of about $400,000 so far, Mr. Brill said.

See related stories on Page 71.

The counsel is charging less than Skadden because Y&R "is not as involved. My impression is they have fewer people working on the case," Mr. Brill said.

WPP's counsel, Davis & Gilbert, a smaller firm with a specialty in ad agencies, is charging $6,000 to $7,000 a day, Mr. Brill estimated.#

Videogame blitz

Industry says sales may double

By IRA TEINOWITZ

Atari and Sega have drafted sports stars for their annual fall tussle with videogame market leader Nintendo.

St. Louis Cardinal Ozzie Smith, Washington Redskins quarterback Doug Williams and National Basketball Association slam-dunk champion Spud Webb will become spokesmen for Atari when it kicks off a full-scale return to TV advertising in August.

Sega of America, now being marketed by Tonka Corp., will use retired Chicago Bears superstar Walter Payton and retired baseball great Reggie Jackson in store displays for its products. Sega's TV effort will pitch new versions of several popular non-sports games.

Industry officials forecast the most competitive year since 1985 for videogames, with retail sales of games and hardware possibly doubling.

But a computer chip shortage could prevent sufficient game supplies from reaching customers.

"There is a real shortage," said Peter Main, VP-marketing for Nintendo of America. "But we think it is livable."

Nintendo, last year's hot seller and now holding about 70% of the $1.1 billion videogame business, is dealing with the shortage by temporarily slashing its game library and game production.

Instead of producing half the software for its hardware, Nintendo will produce only one-third, letting suppliers that have the chips produce the rest.

Nintendo intends to remain a heavy advertiser despite the supply problems, with about $13.5 million, or 68% of its $20 million budget, destined for three products.

The company is skipping the Big 3 TV networks for much of its push, concentrating on local buys and syndicated programs.

Nintendo will put $10 million toward advanced versions of its two most popular games. In October, it breaks spots for "Super Mario Bros. 2" and, in November, for "Zelda II—The Adventure of Link."

> "There is a real shortage [of computer chips]. But we think it is livable."
> —Peter Main
> Nintendo of America

It also will spend $3.5 million on a campaign for a $149.95 "power set," including a floor pad that allows younger children to play games without using a joy stick.

The company recently agreed to use McCann-Erickson, New York, as its agency after McCann purchased and absorbed Nintendo's shop, Geers Gross Advertising.

This year, Tonka is paying much closer attention to the videogame market and expects ties to Sega will mean fewer chip supply problems. But it's readying alternative advertising if supplies of advertised games prove inadequate.

Tonka is rolling out 22 new games, including a new category of adventure games that rely on role-playing rather than manual dexterity.

But the main focus of its $12 million campaign will be on arcade favorites "Double Dragon," "Shinobi" and "Thunderblade."

Tonka kicks off a new campaign in early September that positions Sega as the videogame. Jordan, McGrath, Case & Taylor handles.

Atari suffered major supply problems last year and spent only $4.4 million on advertising, canceling plans for some fall advertising.

But Atari has secured enough chips to double its production this year and hopes to avoid similar supply problems.

It will introduce 40 new games, spending $7.5 million on a blitz that starts in August. Atari will spend $10 million overall. DDB Needham Retail, San Francisco, handles.

Ozzie Smith will promote baseball, Doug Williams football and Spud Webb basketball.

Industry market shares are in dispute. Nintendo estimates Atari's share at 16% and Sega's at 10%. Atari claims it has 20% of the hardware market, compared with 70% for Nintendo and 8% for Sega.#

Negative reviews won't close curtain on 'Willow' promos

By KATE FITZGERALD

Lucasfilm's "Willow" appears to be overcoming negative reviews and intense competition, and may yet reward marketers who've gambled a total of $50 million on product tie-ins.

"Willow" has reaped more than $26 million in box office revenues in its first three weeks, according to Baseline II, a monitoring service. Although the film last week slipped from first place to fifth in revenues, motion picture sources said it is certain to remain on screens throughout the summer.

That would be a huge relief to the dozens of major companies that have yet to start their promotions tied to "Willow." Some—such as Quaker Oats Co.'s $26 million program—kick in as late as July.

"Willow isn't going to be a blockbuster, but it's not a disaster either," said Martin Grove, columnist for The Hollywood Reporter. "It has held up surprisingly well, and it should enjoy a decent run over the summer."

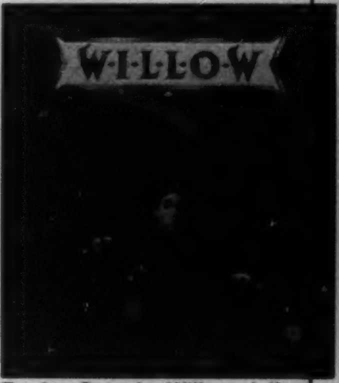
Lee Rich, chairman-ceo of distributor MGM/UA Communications Co., said the film "has defied the critics by doing very well against a major league delicatessen of other movies—a consumer's paradise of offerings. And as kids get out of school this week, 'Willow' will do even better."

It had better, because "Willow's" success or failure as a tie-in project could have a major impact on licensing and promotional-marketing plans tied to several films due for release next year, including Warner Bros. "Batman."

Stan Herman, president of Minneapolis-based Herman Mancino, the promotional-marketing company handling "Batman," said the success of "Willow" may influence how larger retailers and package-food companies participate.

"We're already lining up participants, and preliminary interest has been very good," Mr. Herman said, though he couldn't give the names of companies that had expressed interest in "Batman."

So far, revenues for "Willow" merchandise are promising, sources say. After the first week of release, Waldenbooks listed Ballantine Books' movie tie-in edition of "Willow" at No. 8 on its mass paperback best-seller list. By the third week, the book was ranked No. 9.



Tonka Corp.'s Willow doll, available for $1.99 to $3.99, is part of a line of figures that ties into the movie.

Tonka Corp. reported strong early orders for the first phase of its "Willow" action line, which it began advertising May 30. Sales of other retail items tied to "Willow" also were reportedly strong.

Quaker, whose multibrand promotion gives it the largest stake, said it isn't concerned about "Willow's" longevity.

The first Quaker free standing insert broke June 12, but a five-week flight of TV spots for Cap'n Crunch cereal doesn't break until July.

"The first feedback is very favorable from both the supermarket trade and consumers. We're not changing any FSIs, promotions or our TV schedule," said Barb Biancalana, account supervisor at Bayer Bess Vanderwarker, Chicago, agency for the Cap'n Crunch tie-in.

U.S. Communications Corp., Minneapolis, the agency that lined up the marketers, said the success of the promotions was never threatened by the film itself.

"These promotions were designed to stand on their own, whether or not the film was a box office hit," said Corky Hall, vice chairman of U.S. Communications.#

'Wizard' video to include ad

NEW YORK—"The Wizard of Oz" and "Gone With the Wind" will carry advertising when they're released for the second time for home video in 1989.

Ted Turner, chairman of Turner Broadcasting System, made his announcement at a press conference last week in which he unveiled TBS' new licensing and merchandising division. Turner Entertainment Co. owns the MGM and RKO film libraries that earlier released the two films without advertising.

The new licensing division's first task will be to focus on the 50th anniversaries of "Wizard" and "Gone With the Wind," Mr. Turner said.

The unit will license all TBS properties, including films. It also will license original characters created by Turner's cable networks and introduce a line of merchandise featuring the CNN logo.#

CORRECTIONS & CLARIFICATIONS

- Because of new financial submissions from several advertising agencies, ADVERTISING AGE is updating its ranking of the top 25 U.S. agencies in direct-response billings (AA, May 16, P. S-14). In those adjustments: D'Arcy Masius Benton & Bowles, which the chart ranked 21st with $15.7 million in 1987 billings, should be 17th, with $37.3 million, up from $29 million in 1986; Bozell, Jacobs, Kenyon & Eckhardt, ranked 25th in direct-response billings, should be 24th with $15.2 million in 1987 capitalized billings; McCaffrey & McCall Direct Marketing, which didn't appear in the ranking, is 13th with 1987 direct-response billings of $51 million.#

Coffee consumption continues to cool off

By JOHN C. MAXWELL JR.

Coffee still seems to be losing its kick, and the outlook for the future is not much better.

For the past 20 years, coffee consumption has been on the decline. In 1987, per capita consumption remained relatively flat at 25.3 gallons per person, even though the number of cups consumed per person per day rose 1.1% to 1.76 cups.

This modest increase, however, was offset by a decline in the proportion of people drinking coffee, according to estimates by Wheat First Securities. Consumers are continually moving away from hot and acrid drinks to cold drinks.

In 1986, per capita consumption of coffee dropped 1.9% to 25.3 gallons. This might have been caused partly by higher coffee prices, which resulted from a drought in Brazil.

In 1987, retail prices were lower, as were coffee bean prices.

Although overall consumption in 1987 remained relatively flat, there remains a direct correlation between coffee consumption and the age of consumers. As the population ages, consumption increases.

But consumption by age group is dropping across the board, and, thus, we expect coffee consumption to continue declining for the foreseeable future.

According to Beverage Marketing, 27% of all coffee drinkers (consuming four to nine cups a day) account for 53% of the coffee consumed. Light coffee drinkers (three or fewer cups a day) are 31% of the population, but drink less than 7% of all coffee consumed.

In the soluble instant coffee market, General Foods Corp.'s market share appears to be eroding, down to 39.1% in 1987 from 40.3% in 1986.

It seems most of the decrease is being picked up by Nestle Foods Corp. and Procter & Gamble Co., gaining 1.4 share points and 0.6 share points, respectively.

In the regular coffee market, GF showed a 1.4 share-point loss, from 35.9% in 1986.

Again, P&G seems to be benefiting from the GF loss, picking up more than 3 share points.

The U.S. Department of Agriculture has estimated 1987-88 world production at a record 101.2 million bags, an increase of almost 29% from an estimated 78.5 million for 1986-87.

The record production estimate is primarily due to the extremely strong Brazilian crop and some recovery in Colombia.

The 101.2 million-bag crop has had a dampening effect on prices, even though all beans may not be of the quality that's demanded by both the roasters and consumers.#

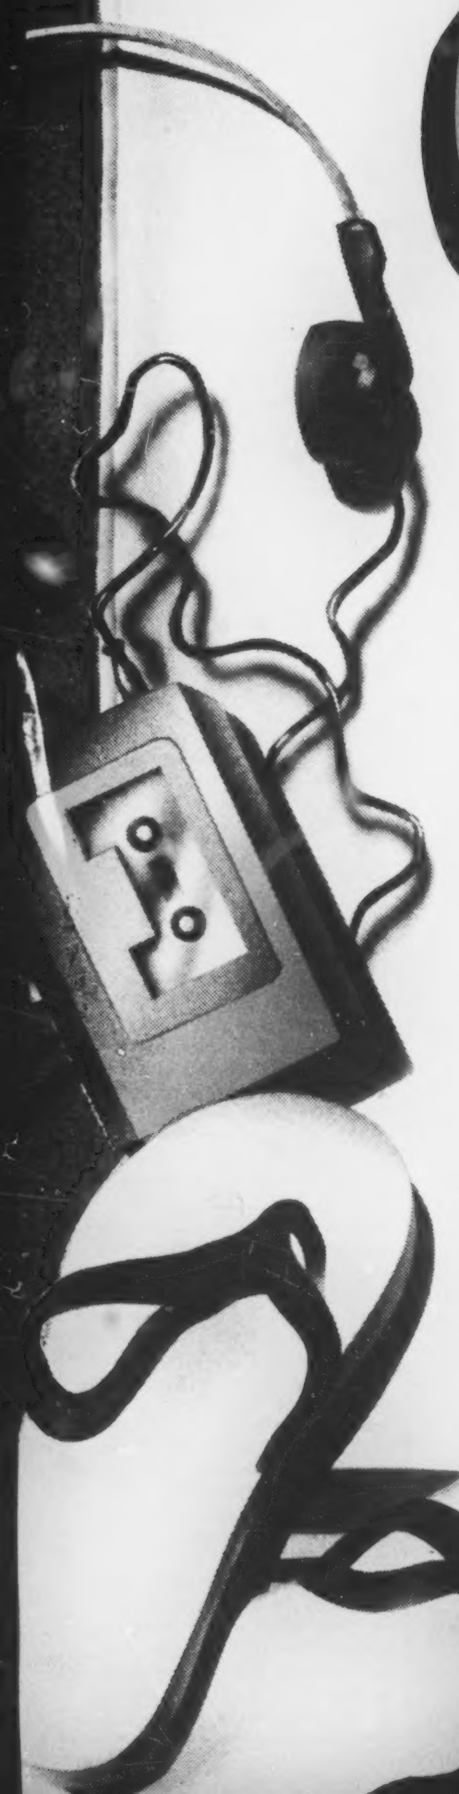
Agencies battle for billings in hot L.A. market



By Jennifer Pendleton

Believing that Los Angeles is on the brink of a transformation from provincial business center to U.S. commercial capital, ad agencies based in Europe and in other parts of the U.S. have sought to establish West Coast offices.

TBWA, the expansion-minded multinational agency with European roots, found the Los Angeles market isn't for everybody, however. As recently as 1986, the agency dispatched a senior executive to the second largest U.S. city to scout locations and interview prospective personnel.

But the agency decided the timing wasn't right. "We thought, and still think, [Los Angeles] is a great market," says Richard Costello, TBWA's U.S. president. "But our big concern was that there was too much competition, far more competition than any market can absorb. Los Angeles doesn't need another advertising agency."

Scali McCabe Sloves probably wishes it had TBWA's foresight. In January, the New York-based agency that produced so much award-winning creative work in the 1970s folded its 2-year-old Los Angeles office after failing to win any major accounts.

"[Los Angeles] isn't a great advertising agency market," says Scali Chairman Marvin Sloves. "It's hard to make money there, even when you're well established . . . Our assumption was that because of our great success in New York, we were automatically assured a place in Los Angeles. It was wrong—very wrong."

But Scali is not through with California forever. "It doesn't mean I'm not going back. When, I don't know, but we'll probably go back," says Mr. Sloves.

At present, Los Angeles may be the most competitive agency city in the country. Because of a surplus of agencies and a limited number of consumer product accounts in the Los Angeles area, better-known shops have been forced to compete for smaller accounts. For example, Asher/Gould, BBDO Worldwide; DDB Needham Worldwide, Della Femina, Travisano & Partners, Foote, Cone & Belding, Ketchum Advertising and Sokol Berman all competed last fall for the $4 million California Egg Commission account. Asher/Gould won the account in November.

Branch offices of major multinationals are especially hard-pressed as conflicts with business in other represented cities frequently block efforts to pitch accounts.

"Everybody's scrambling for a piece of the pie. Look at the available advertising dollars and the number of agencies. I continue to be amazed with what it takes to move down the field," says John Littlewood, chairman-ceo, N W Ayer, Los Angeles.

Cleveland-based Wyse Advertising is the latest agency to expand into Los Angeles (AA, April 4). Wyse is short on details but says it hopes to fulfill its plans by the fall. Undoubtedly others will follow.

"Los Angeles is characterized by a lot more retail-oriented business than any other market," explains Gerrold Rubin, president, Rubin, Postaer and Associates, Los Angeles. "If you want to be in this market, you have to posture yourself to do that kind of work."

Of course 'that kind of work'—typically hard-sell, price-and-item messages—are anathema to most creatives, especially people from the East," says Mr. Rubin. "But you adjust or perish."

Ben Enis, professor of marketing at the University of Southern California, Los Angeles, believes the city could become the premier city of U.S. business. "More than any other city on the planet, [Los Angeles] has the opportunity to be such."

Emerging are signs that indicate California's largest city has the potential to become the U.S. business hub in years to come.

The ports of Long Beach and Los Angeles handled 58.6 million tons of cargo in 1986, far ahead of the port of New York and New Jersey's combined 21 million ton level. A University of California at San Diego study shows that 82% of California's total annual trade of $80 billion is with Pacific Rim nations.

L.A. agency competition boils

According to the Southern California Association of Governments, the population of the six-county southern California region will increase from 12.8 million in 1985 to 18.3 million by 2010.

The ethnic makeup of the region will also change. The 60% of the population that is white today will shrink to 41% by 2010. Hispanics, now 24% of the region's total, will make up almost 40%. Asians, now consisting of 6.2%, will account for 9.3%. Blacks, currently 9% of the total, expect a modest increase to 10.2%.

Pundits long assumed that Los Angeles would become the nation's ad capital as its stature as a business center increased. The theory now has fallen out of favor.

According to David W. Stewart, a USC marketing professor and industry consultant, New York and Chicago will remain the ad centers unless major corporations move their headquarters to Los Angeles, he says. "So far, I don't see any evidence that that is happening," he says. "There is no question Los Angeles is becoming a more important marketing town as the expansion of the Pacific Rim occurs. But it is highly unlikely it will become a more important advertising center."

It may take a while for Los Angeles to achieve the No. 1 spot. According to ADVERTISING AGE's 1988 edition of "U.S. Advertising Agency Profiles," New York had total 1987 billings of $19.7 billion, seven times Los Angeles' $2.8 billion. Chicago held onto its No. 2 position, with total billings of $5.1 billion, almost twice that of Los Angeles. San Francisco came in at $1.3 billion.

Currently, Los Angeles agencies face some rather overwhelming odds against snaring major national advertising accounts because so few are located in the region.

Only eight of the recent ADVERTISING AGE 100 Leading National Advertisers are based on the West Coast. Walt Disney Co. was largest with a $219 million 1986 budget, making it the 38th-largest national advertiser. Toyota Motor Sales USA followed with a $209 million budget, American Honda Motor Co. at $205 million, Nissan Motor Corp. USA with $180 million, Mazda Motors of America at $156 million. E&J Gallo Winery, Clorox Co. and Pacific Telesis Group also appeared in the ranking.

The extent to which Japanese auto companies dominate the ranking is telling. Agency executives estimate Asian-based automakers currently make up in excess of $800 million of the Los Angeles market's total billings.

"An agency can't come here and build a successful operation on any other client basis alone," says Nelson "Skip" Riddle, president-chief operating officer of Saatchi & Saatchi DFS, Torrance, Calif., which handles Toyota.

During the past two years, other major Asian concerns—Hyundai Motor America and Daihatsu America—established U.S. operations in southern California, bringing additional billings into the market for Backer Spielvogel Bates and Admarketing Inc., respectively.

There is the prospect of other reasonably significant auto advertising clients from Asia. Nissan's newly established Infiniti division, which will market luxury cars, is expected to name a U.S. ad agency soon, and South Korea's Kia Motor Corp. is hoping to establish itself in the U.S. by 1989. Likewise, Yue Loong Motor Corp. of Taiwan and Global Motors, marketer of Yugoslavia's Yugo, are considering marketing Asian-built vehicles in the U.S. in the near future.

In addition, John Hammond, managing partner of J.D. Power & Associates, an Agoura Hills, Calif.-based market research company, points to Korea's Samsung as a potential new auto competitor in the U.S. within 10 years. In longer terms—well into the 21st century—he believes automotive companies from India and the People's Republic of China may enter into the U.S. market.

Outside automotive, entertainment and entertainment-related businesses make up the only other substantial sector of the Los Angeles advertising market.

The major Hollywood studios, plus the myriad smaller entertainment companies, collectively represent $800 million to $1 billion in total ad billings. Among the most significant trends in recent years: escalating ad budgets for the theatrical release of major motion pictures and the booming home video business. But the business—famous for its instability—has brutal swings.

For agencies trying to survive in the Los Angeles of today, there is no alternative but to make the most of every opportunity.#

Ryder & Schild adds unit

MIAMI—Ryder & Schild, an ad agency with annual billings of more than $20 million, has formed Ryder & Schild Direct.

The unit will handle direct mail, telemarketing and computer-based list segmentation.

Sheridan Sands, 55, will be the VP in charge of Ryder & Schild Direct. He was formerly president of Power House Marketing, Passaic Park, N.J.

Ryder & Schild wants to increase its direct-mail billings from about 2% of total billings to between 10% and 15% in the next few years, Mr. Sands said.#

Introducing the Cycle Sat

You know that sinking feeling – when your boss or a client calls and barks his complaints about lost spots, damaged spots, poorly dubbed spots or spots with missing traffic instructions. It can ruin your day.

Now, instead of delivering your spot TV commercials to television stations by conventional ground courier and hoping for the best, there's a better way: The Cycle Sat Satellite Courier System.

Avoid dub flubs.

The Cycle Sat Satellite Courier System delivers network quality spots and traffic instructions simultaneously by satellite – just like the networks. Turnaround time for duplication is totally eliminated because the spot is fed directly to the engineer at the receiving TV station. So you get the quality of first-generation spots while you avoid the possibility of lost or damaged tapes.

Bank advertising on the wane

By JUDITH GRAHAM

Bank advertising is languishing as the industry grapples with a scarcity of new products.

The home equity loan, last year's hot banking product, is no longer getting heavy ad spending after falling short of bankers' expectations. Ads for "all-in-one" accounts, typically combining checking and savings accounts with credit lines, also have trailed off as these once-innovative products have become standard fare.

"The diminution of bank advertising volume crosses all product categories," said Kenneth Foushee, president of Imprimatur, a St. Louis-based ad and sales-promotion agency. "The bottom line is that there's a dearth of products to advertise now."

In the New York metropolitan market, home equity advertising totaled $2.8 million for the January-to-April period, down 12.5% from the $3.2 million spent in 1987's first four months, according to Competitrack, which tracks financial services advertising.

All-in-one account advertising plunged 49% to $2.2 million in the same period this year, and advertising for individual retirement accounts—popular between 1982 and April 1987 but less so now because of tax reform—skidded 61% to $1.6 million, Competitrack said.

Print advertising was hit hardest.

According to Ad Trends, a Bank Marketing Association service that tracks advertising in 300 major markets, the volume of page ads slipped 21.9%—to 3,091—in the first four months of this year from the same period in 1987.

Not all bank advertising is in the doldrums. The nation's larger banks are shifting more of their marketing dollars to image-building TV campaigns.

In New York, banks spent $8.8 million on image-building TV spots in the first four months of 1988, up 137.8% from the year before. During the same period, print ad spending tumbled 11% to $24 million, Competitrack said.

In other markets, increased mergers and acquisitions in the banking industry are prompting banks to define new identities.

"Competition is more intense than ever this year, with banks moving into new regions through acquisitions and non-bank banks posing a serious threat," said Michael Warner, VP-director of advertising at the Bank Marketing Association. "And banks are doing more image advertising to maintain their position."

In terms of product spots, some banks are starting to direct more ad dollars to the heart and soul of their business: checking accounts.

For example, First National Bank of Chicago has created a new checking-account package and is backing it with a 30-second animated spot from Foote, Cone & Belding.

The industry's slowdown in new-product development follows a surge of activity after government regulations were relaxed in 1980.

"Banks were very creative in developing products that were more convenient and that had more favorable rate structures. But now, by and large, these things have been done," said Robert Moss, Competitrack president.

One reason ad spending is down is because bankers overestimated the size and profit potential of the home equity market. The falloff in that advertising has been drastic.

In the January-to-April period, home equity advertising slipped 71.3% to 96 full pages, Ad Trends reported.

Bankers expected consumers would rush to take out the tax-deductible home equity loans in the wake of the 1986 Tax Reform Act, which eliminated tax deductions for most consumer interest expenses. But most consumers shied away from the loans, partly because of criticism from consumer advocates.

Then banks hurt their profitability by waiving or lowering fees on the loans to attract customers, said Edward Furash, president of Furash & Co., a bank consulting company.

This year, banks have changed the positioning of home equity loans, stressing their ease and convenience instead of their tax deductibility and relatively low cost.#

Ad spending rises 7.4%

Coen charts bigger gains at local level during 1987

New York—U.S. advertising volume totaled $109.65 billion in 1987, a 7.4% increase from 1986, according to final figures tabulated by Robert J. Coen, senior VP-director of forecasting at McCann-Erickson Worldwide.

As the accompanying tables show, total local advertising outpaced national advertising in percentage growth, gaining 8.2% compared with 6.6% for national advertising.

Advertising in the largest category, newspapers, grew a healthy 9% last year, led by a 9.8% increase in local advertising.

By contrast, Mr. Coen reported only a 1.9% hike in network TV advertising.

"The major problems in the advertising industry in 1987 and during the two preceding years can be traced to stagnation in major mass-media budgeting by large national marketers that do business across the U.S.," Mr. Coen wrote in an earlier article (AA, May 23). These charts were originally intended to accompany that article.

Mr. Coen expects 1988 ad volume to be about 9% above 1987.#

These indexes are seasonally adjusted measures of the monthly advertising revenues for the major national media. Omnicom mulls sale of Tracy-Locke share

DALLAS—Omnicom Group is believed to be negotiating the sale of a minority share of Tracy-Locke to a small group of the agency's executives. Sources say Howard Davis, Tracy-Locke chairman, and Phil Slott, who about one month ago left his post as chairman of BBDO, London, are among the potential minority owners. Mr. Slott has already met with some agency clients, sources say.

If it happens, the sale of an interest in the $326 million agency would mark the first time one of the new mega-agency groups had agreed to sell part of a U.S. shop to employees. WPP Group Chief Executive Martin Sorrell refused to sell Lord, Geller, Federico, Einstein, New York,

Fox net signals major upheaval

By VERNE GAY

NEW YORK—News Corp. Ltd. said it might radically restructure, or possibly even eliminate, the Fox Television Network if it continues to suffer huge financial losses.

In a meeting before financial analysts last week, News Corp. Chief Financial Officer Richard Sarazen said the network would lose $80 million in the fiscal year ending this month. The company had expected losses of only $30 million to $50 million, he said.

Mr. Sarazen also said News Corp. would review its options by yearend if the massive hemorrhage keeps flowing, sources said.

Contacted by ADVERTISING AGE late last week, Mr. Sarazen said: "I was asked at the meeting how long we would be willing to lose money at the rate we're losing it today. And I told the analysts that Barry Diller [Fox chairman] and Rupert Murdoch [News Corp. chairman] are continuing to review the progress of Fox Broadcasting and that . . . six to nine months from now they'll have a better idea."

One analyst said people left the meeting with the impression that News Corp. would close the network if losses continued to pile up. Although he said this indication "was very strong," other analysts said this "totally misrepresented" Mr. Sarazen's remarks.

Mr. Sarazen emphasized to AD AGE that the company may later "see light at the end of the tunnel," but even if it

Tobacco ads: Times have changed

By FRED DANZIG

Since the legendary George Washington Hill of American Tobacco Co. took tobacco advertising onto radio in 1928, cigarette advertising has been among the most innovative and persistent.

Much of that advertising turned to health issues during the late 1940s and early '50s. Not the stern health warnings seen today, but ads calling brands "the greatest protection." Or claiming, "you'll feel better."

Last week, a jury found Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. partially liable for an L&M smoker's death from lung cancer—in part due to a 1950s L&M ad claiming its cigarettes were "just what the doctor ordered."

This is the first time a tobacco company has been held liable for the health implications of its advertising, and the focus now is on those early claims—particularly pre-1966, when health warnings on packs and in ads became law.

That era's cigarette advertising seems incredible in light of today's knowledge about the hazards of smoking.

Celebrity endorsers such as Rosalind Russell and Barbara Stanwyck, movie stars of the day, as well as TV's popular Lucille Ball and Desi Arnez, made pitches for various brands.

In 1947, one of R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co.'s ads boasted of a doctors' survey: "More doctors smoke Camels than any other cigarette. Not one single case of throat irritation." Throat irritation was a common angle; opera stars also were used as endorsers.

Still, the Federal Trade Commission did get involved in those days. It once ordered Mr. Hill to drop ad claims for

Sights set on disposable lenses

By PATRICIA WINTERS

Contact lenses that are thrown away after a week's wear are about to become the new battleground in the $500 million lens market.

Johnson & Johnson this week will announce it's rolling national its Acuvue disposable contact lens, the nation's first disposable lens. Acuvue was introduced in Florida test markets a year ago.

The lens, marketed by J&J's Vistakon subsidiary, was expanded into California last March. J&J expects the product to be available nationally by mid-July, a spokesman said.

Not to be outdone, contact-lens leader Bausch & Lomb late last week said it was introducing a disposable lens, SeeQuence, in six Florida and California markets with national introduction scheduled for 1989.

SeeQuence is marketed as part of the company's "fresh lens" program.

Lintas:New York created this nigh-tech, informational TV spot to promote Johnson & Johnson's Acuvue disposable contact lenses.

Though contact lenses rarely get TV ad support—with the exception of the lenses that can change eye color—both J&J and Bausch & Lomb are going to tout their new products on the medium.

The J&J spokesman said the company will back Acuvue "with the most extensive campaign ever for contact lenses." Lintas:New York is handling.

The company will use a commercial called "Eye Storm," which was shown in Florida and California markets. It shows a close-up of an eye and, using computer-generated graphics, a developing storm inside the eye. Voice-over explains that, despite cleaning, lenses can build up irritations in the eye. It goes on to explain the health benefits of using disposable lenses.

Print ads and an extensive direct-mail and informational campaign to eyecare professionals will support. Kallir, Philips, Ross handles professional advertising.

Bausch & Lomb says it will test TV spots using a lifestyle approach in some of the markets where its lenses will be marketed. Print will also be used. Avrett, Free & Ginsberg handles consumer ads; ICE Communications, Rochester, N.Y., handles profes-

Senators back off paid anti-drug ads

By STEVEN W. COLFORD

WASHINGTON—Two U.S. senators abandoned plans for a federally funded, $225 million paid anti-drug campaign that would have undercut the industry's volunteer effort.

The ad industry's ambitious Media-Advertising Partnership for a Drug-Free America may have persuaded the senators to abandon their plan. The partnership has resulted in about $150 million of donated time and space, and has been credited with a marked increase in negative drug-use attitudes among 9-to-12-year-olds.

Lynn Mapes, media director for the partnership, said aides to Sens. Ernest Hollings (D., S.C.) and John Danforth (R., Mo.) told him last week the bipartisan legislation would be withdrawn.

The proposal called for a paid campaign to rival the voluntary program of the partnership, which was formed last year.

Mr. Mapes contended the partnership would evaporate in the face of a rival, paid campaign.

"Sen. Danforth said he had been unaware of the scope of what the partnership is doing, which is probably the largest volunteer effort in history," Mr. Mapes said. "We had a very good meeting, and when it ended, Sen. Danforth said he didn't want to rain on our parade."

Mr. Mapes had a similar meeting with an aide to Sen. Hollings, chairman of the Senate Commerce Committee. He said the aide told him after the meeting that the senator was willing to withdraw the bill if Sen. Danforth agreed.

Late last week, Tom Hedrick, partnership executive director, appeared before the Senate Labor & Human Resources Committee to outline the voluntary campaign's accomplishments of the past 18 months.

The partnership will aim for $500 million in donated time and space in the coming year, Mr. Hedrick said.

He assured the committee's chairman, Sen. Edward Kennedy (D., Mass.), that no paid advertising or even production expenses needed to be funded by anti-drug legislation.

"If we hadn't seen momentum in the private sector, [we] would need" the funding, Mr. Hedrick told Sen. Kennedy.

After the hearing, Mr. Hedrick said the partnership has suggested the $225 million could be better used to help the National Institute on Drug Abuse's telephone hot line, while partnership ads could include the hot line number.

Another idea, he said, would be to buy an hour or two of network prime time for an anti-drug special program.#

'TV Guide' readies N.Y. cable edition

By PATRICK REILLY

Triangle Publications will launch a cable edition of TV Guide for New York City that will serve as a forerunner to similar editions in other metropolitan areas.

Triangle managers late last week were finalizing details of the agreement with four major multiple cable systems, which will distribute the new edition of TV Guide to cable subscribers.

With the July 2 cable edition, TV Guide will instantly add 50,000 paid circulation in Staten Island, Queens and Brooklyn, whose households are now being wired. Cable subscribers will be charged for the magazine on their monthly cable bills. When the area is completely wired by the early 1990s, an expected 1.2 million households will get the cable edition of TV Guide.

"TV Guide is always looking at all options for building its business, and this is a natural outgrowth of those interests," said William Deitch, TV Guide general manager. TV Guide already is the largest paid consumer magazine with 16.9 million weekly circulation.

Although the regular edition of TV Guide now carries cable programming listings, the new edition will have a more extensive listing and carry editorial features about cable TV, a four-star movie chart and a cable channel conversion

Leaner times bedevil business magazines

Publications act to beef up details about readership

By Neal Weinstock

Facing rising postal and paper costs, business publications are confronting narrowing profit margins.

Ads placed in business magazines grow less useful as distribution consolidates to fewer, larger customers, even though market volume may remain strong. Although many advertisers maintain trade-oriented campaigns in publications targeting their customers in lean times, business publications tend to boom primarily when vendors think a product category or industry segment can or should grow.

"There is a tendency of many corporations to focus on particular customers to the detriment of broadening their customer base. You don't need trades if you sell to a few large buyers, and a lot of fields have consolidated recently. But if you want to broaden distribution, trades are very efficient,' says Dave Green, director-corporate communications at PPG Industries.

U.S. business publications took in $2.23 billion in ad revenues last year, according to Rome Reports, growing 3.7% since 1986. Standard Rate & Data Service categories included in that figure represent every U.S. industry, showing that advertising in business publications—as an indicator of industrial health—outpaced 1987's 2.9% growth in gross national product.

However, it fell behind McCann-Erickson Worldwide's estimated 7.6% growth for total U.S. ad expenditures. Indeed, growth in business magazine ad dollars has dropped behind U.S. advertising expenditure growth since 1985. (See chart.)

Is the lag caused by decreasing efficiency in reaching business targets? Is growth in business title numbers bringing page rates down through competition, and actually increasing effectiveness? Or both?

According to the Business/Professional Advertising Association's 1988 survey of trade advertisers, "About 35% of the advertisers' business-to-business budgets went to trade magazines." (The remainder went to company catalogs, trade shows and exhibits, direct mail, publicity, etc.)

That share has stayed constant over the last decade, says BPAA President Ron Coleman. While 55% of the advertisers surveyed increased their total business-to-business budgets in the past two years, only 20% decreased budgets, and 25% remained stable.

However, a study by Business Marketing Research of Eastchester, N.Y., found 69% of the agencies that deal with business magazines say their clients' budgets were up, 12% say budgets were down and 18% say they stayed the same. The study included more than 1,000 respondents.

Competition from other business-to-business media has remained slight. Videocassettes and other audio-visual segments have grown to 4% of BPAA-surveyed budgets, the only real growth media in the '80s. Telemarketing has maintained a steady 1%, says Mr. Coleman, and "trade shows and exhibits were once very high, then they were down, and now they've bounced back a bit [to 12%], and direct mail has also bounced around [8%]."

Slow growth for business magazines is not attributable to competition from other business-to-business ad media. "I was surprised," Mr. Coleman says. "If you had told me that only 1% [of business-to-business advertising] was spent on spot radio or TV, with all the growth we've expected there, I would have said that's crazy. But it's held very low there over the years."

However, the percentage spent on different business-to-business media depends very much on the advertiser's size and the size of its market. "That 1% on TV is conceivably 10% if you look just at people like IBM, Apple or some other companies with broad-base markets and big investor communities. But most organizations are not large enough to make effective use of radio and television," Mr. Coleman says.

The Business Publications Audit of Circulation recently responded to the competition by announcing a new program to audit business-magazine surveys of pass-along readership.

Richard Farrell, BPA chairman and chief of his own corporate-communications business, describes the new service as a response to a need for greater accountability.

"In some way we're seeing the past revisited," he says. "Since . . . the start of the Audit Bureau . . . the trend has been toward the use of audited publications, a lot of which was driven by major advertisers and agencies. Accountability Consumer Marketing Vs. Business Marketing...

Emotions.

Consumer advertising sells the "sizzle". It speaks to the buyer's senses, tastes, securities, and insecurities. Age groups, sexes, personalities, demographics, and psychographics of all kinds are researched, analyzed, and manipulated by the marketer.

The $100 Billion Market.

The business-to-business market is a large, viable, and vital part of our economy.

Business marketers...CEOs, presidents, vice presidents, and sales and marketing managers alike, are people of stature and influence in their companies.

They spend $100 billion a year to get their messages across...and billions more on the purchase of business goods and services.

Nothing reaches the business marketer like Business Marketing magazine.

Business Marketing is the only magazine specifically devoted to business-to-business marketing news, strategy, and decision making.

When it comes to targeting your ad dollars and tapping the potential of the business-to-business market, no publication beats the industry's bible, Business Marketing.

became almost automatic. But there's a new type of buyer coming into the market. They're used to looking at television's boxcar numbers—like we deliver counties X, Y and Z.

"Education is very important, teaching these newer agency people how to read circulation statements. And beefing up our audience information even more [is necessary]—pass-along readership is the first thing we'll tackle. We've discussed future projects that will audit magazines' demographics and other research," says Mr. Farrell.

Business magazines worry not only about new media, but about competition within the medium. SRDS measured about 585 business titles in 1987, versus 570 in 1986, 600 in 1985, and 580 in 1984. The BPA counts 2,750 books published in 1987 (only 1,157 are BPA-audited), versus under 2,700 in '86. That growth has come despite an 8% annual attrition rate, meaning about 215 died last year while 266 were born.

"Until 18 months ago," says Mr. Farrell, "there was a historic 4% to 5% attrition rate. Then it shot up. That has something to do with all the mergers in publishing, I think. So I'd say in another 12 months we'll see the attrition rate going back down."

"We have gone through something of a shakeout," says Mr. Green. "Maybe buyers do what they can to take advantage of that. I continue to think the trades are very efficient . . . but the medium is most effective if one has a large enough potential market."

According to Mr. Farrell, although some agencies specialize in trades, tracking and buying them means less profit and more work than leading a client into broadcasting, where the bulk of agency business amortizes costs.

Trade decisions are often made by advertisers themselves or by marketing directors instead of ad directors. It's a much more personal decision for an executive to buy something he is quoted in than on TV or in a national newspaper. And for small-to-medium size companies in growing industries, it's far more effective.

"Half of my clients ask for advice on buying ads in trade magazines," says Michael Geylin, president of Kermish-Geylin PR, New York.

These are questions on a more personal level, Mr. Geylin says, "We have never offered any advertising services or rating of the trades . . . It's something many PR people encounter . . . because we follow the trades in an editorial way, and they [clients] need to know which ones their intended audience is really reading."

The companies that seek Mr. Geylin's advice on ad buying are, "Either the small companies just starting out, or larger companies that are just branching into the field," implying that growth companies and growing industries rely more on business-to-business advertising.

"Trades normally either follow the economy or lead it by about six months . . . Right now you'd expect good linage figures in the medical industry, computers and new electronic industries," says Bill O'Donnell, president of the Association of Business Publishers.

In fact, trade books are seen by many as good barometers of industrial health. By that measure, the major SRDS categories—those with ad revenues more than $20 million—that increased the most in 1987 revenues were: food processing up 18.8%; building up 15.7%; trucking was up 14.8%; waste management increased 14.6%; and drug packaging grew 14.5%.

On the negative side, paper dropped 26.8%; glue—the only category with revenues below $20 million—dipped 20%; oil 19.1%, and real estate decreased 17.7%.

As titles grow in number, however, executive readers face clutter and may well pay less attention to each publication.

SRDS keeps constant watch on about 600 magazines, which represents an ever-shrinking percentage of business titles being published, says Kathren Franolich, general manager of Rome Reports.

SRDS-measured books continue to account for the lion's share of linage. "That's [SRDS] the best general indicator available," says Ms. Franolich. "If issues are growing [in number of titles] faster than what they measure, I wouldn't call that a concentration of the linage into fewer books, it would mean the power stays pretty much where it is."

Latin tango: BBDO Brazilian buy steps on Saatchi toes

By JULIA MICHAELS

SAO PAULO—It was BBDO vs. Saatchi & Saatchi this month in Brazil, and BBDO won.

BBDO Worldwide's deal to buy 19% of Brazil's No. 2 agency is a big setback for the Saatchi brothers in their quest to grow fast in Latin America (AA, May 30).

For years, Saatchi has been trying to get a foot in the door of one of Brazil's top five agencies, but its latest bid—to acquire Alcantara Machado, Periscinoto Comunicacoes, now known as ALMAP/BBDO—was rejected just before the deal with BBDO was closed.

Brazil is strategically important to agencies because the country constitutes half of the ad business in Latin America, sources estimate.

Saatchi now has only one independent agency to shoot for among the top five Brazilian shops—Dualibi, Petit, Zaragoza Propaganda, owned by three local partners who are notoriously independent.

Local sources say the two are talking but are nowhere near an agreement.

However, Roberto Duailibi, partner in the Brazilian agency, denied the agency was talking to Saatchi.

Saatchi was said to be close to sealing the deal with ALMAP. However, last-minute problems and the deadline imposed by BBDO for its own deal pushed ALMAP toward the Omnicom Group agency (AA, May 23).

The deal could shake loose one of J. Walter Thompson Publicidade's most important accounts: Pepsi-Cola Brasil, which recently announced plans to spend $120 million on marketing and advertising over the next three years. JWT's only work in Brazil is to reshoot spots created by BBDO New York and do media placement.

M. Imoberdorf

"We're in a better position to get Pepsi than we were before," said Eduardo Vargas, BBDO Latin America chairman in Bogota. BBDO is Pepsi's U.S. agency.

ALMAP is said to be valued at $20 million, but details of negotiations with BBDO weren't disclosed. One source said BBDO paid 20 times earnings for its stake, considered a very high price.

Sources in Latin America said Saatchi's offer had been higher, but BBDO was philosophically closer to ALMAP.

The contract with ALMAP gives BBDO an option to buy "a substantial majority stake in two to four years," Mr. Vargas said.

To buy into ALMAP, BBDO had to sell its 47% share of Lage Stabel/-BBDO, Brazil's No. 13 agency. The agency changed its name to Lage Stabel & Magy.

Local sources say LSM President Magy Imoberdorf knew how to make the most of her situation. With BBDO desperate for a bigger presence in Brazil with ALMAP, sources say Ms. Imoberdorf managed to buy back the shares for less than $100,000. Now, Ms. Imoberdorf owns 40% of the agency, and Rony Lage and Jose Carlos Stabel, partners in the agency, share the remaining 60%.

Ms. Imoberdorf wouldn't discuss details of the buyback.

Agency sources say BBDO clients PepsiCo Foods and Gillette Co. will move from LSM to ALMAP/BBDO, which already handles other Gillette business and has previously been a PepsiCo agency.

The Gillette personal-care products account is worth $300,000, while the PepsiCo Foods' Ruffles potato chips and Doritos ad budget totals $700,000, Ms. Imoberdorf said.

ALMAP will continue its informal working relationship with Wells, Rich, Greene. Both agencies handle Pan American World Airways.#

Sponsors add kick to U.S. bid for World Soccer Cup

By JOHN PARRY

ZURICH—Sponsorship opportunities are helping sew up the U.S.' chances of hosting the 1994 World Soccer Cup, sources at the Federation Internationale des Football Associations say.

On July 4, the executive committee of FIFA, soccer's international governing body, will choose the U.S. over Brazil and Morocco for what is arguably the world's most popular sporting event, sources say.

"It seems as though the Americans have got it wrapped up," said Steven Dixon of ISL Marketing, which handles FIFA's marketing program. However, he said, "I've been in this game a long time, and you're never sure until the day."

The three countries vying for the World Cup made final presentations during the week of May 16.

If the U.S. gets the nod as expected, ISL will work closely with a clutch of heavyweight U.S. sponsors (AA, April 11), including Anheuser-Busch, Coca-Cola Co., Gillette Co. and Philip Morris Cos.

Others—including American Express Co., SmithKline Beckman Corp., Union Pacific Railroad Co. and Warner Communications—have intimated they might climb on board when and if the U.S. Soccer Federation wins the bid.

The desire of FIFA President Joao Havelange to have the tournament in the U.S. for the first time along with the corporate muscle of the existing and prospective sponsors appear to have made up FIFA officials' minds, sources say.

Guido Tognoni, a FIFA spokesman, said a five-man inspection team sent by FIFA to visit all three countries in April was impressed with the U.S. facilities.

"They visited 16 stadiums in 13 different locations, and what impressed them most was the space around the stadiums, the good transport facilities and the enthusiasm of the authorities," he said.

U.S. cities visited included Chicago, Los Angeles and New York.

Keith Walker, secretary of the Scottish Football Association and a member of the FIFA group that visited the U.S., told reporters the whole trip had been "very positive."

FIFA officials said the U.S. Soccer Federation guaranteed that it will lay natural turf for the tournament in stadiums that have artificial grass. FIFA rules forbid international games to be played on artificial surfaces.

Mr. Tognoni said World Cup USA 1994, a lobbying group put together by the U.S. Soccer Federation to aid in the bid, wasn't involved in the final phase of the negotiations.

"We deal with national federations, not lobbying groups," he said.

Brazil has shown the FIFA investigators 12 stadiums, some of which are in disrepair, sources say.

Morocco has two new stadiums in Casablanca and Rabat, and has promised to build another nine if FIFA gives the World Cup to Africa for the first time.#

World's product parity perception high

Ads addressing consumers' lifestyles needed

By NANCY GIGES

NEW YORK—A new study by BBDO Worldwide shows that two-thirds of consumers surveyed in 28 countries considered brands in 13 product categories to be at parity.

That's no surprise to Bruce Meyers, BBDO exec VP-director of research services, who conducted a similar study—with similar findings—in the U.S. three years ago.

What that means for agencies, Mr. Meyers said, is that advertising can't focus solely on product performance but also must relate the product to a person's life in an important way.

"An agency must bring in the 'you' imagery," he said.

Mr. Meyers said he expected such findings not only because of real product parity but also because of the explosion of brand proliferation accompanied by advertising and promotion.

He anticipates the figures will rise by the time BBDO does a follow-up study.

Working through its own research facilities, BBDO conducted interviews for product categories ranging from airlines to cigarettes to credit cards to coffee. The phone survey, which was done last fall, involved 150 people from each of the 28 countries.

Perceived parity averaged 63% for all categories in all countries. The Japanese have the highest perception of parity across all product categories at 99% and Colombians the lowest at 28%.

Viewed by product category, credit cards have the highest parity perception at 76% and cigarettes the lowest at 52%.

In reporting the results, BBDO clustered countries that exhibited similar levels and patterns of parity perceptions.

The highest figures—an 83% average—came from the Asia/Pacific region, including the countries of Australia, Japan, Malaysia and South Korea, and, though not part of the region, France.

Mr. Meyers said France wasn't a surprise when one thinks of the highly emotional, visual advertising found in that country, advertising that's similar in feeling, if not in execution, to Japanese advertising.

The next cluster, described as U.S.-influenced markets—averaging 65%—included Argentina, Canada, Hong Kong, Kuwait, Mexico, Singapore and the U.S.

The third cluster, primarily European countries—averaging 60%—included Austria, Belgium, Denmark, Italy, the Netherlands, South Africa, Spain, the U.K. and West Germany.

Parity perceptions were lowest (48%) in Hispanic markets, including Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, El Salvador, the Philippines and Puerto Rico.

BBDO segmented categories into traditional products—bar soap, dry soup, paper towels and snack chips—which scored an average parity of 71%; contemporary products—airlines, colas, personal computers, shampoos and TVs—which scored 59%; and hedonistic products—beer, cigarettes and coffee—which scored 55%. (Credit cards weren't clustered.)

Allen Rosenshine, president-ceo of Omnicom Group, BBDO's parent, used the data to support the contention in a speech last month that "we are most certainly doing a parity dance" around the world.

He maintained that another factor contributing to actual product parity is the notion of growing consumer parity in the global market.

"Now here's where our dance

GB-Inno grows out of Belgium

Retailer primed for European expansion

By PAUL MONTGOMERY

BRUSSELS—The company has possibly the world's strangest name—GB-Inno-BM—but, as Belgium's biggest retailer, its position isn't strange at all.

GB-Inno is primed for 1992, when the last trade barriers among the 12 European Economic Community countries will be dissolved, making Europe one market.

The $3.7 billion retail group, with stores ranging from supermarkets to giant toy stores to fast-food outlets, is executing an aggressive two-prong strategy. It's seeking solid local partners for rapid foreign expansion, and at the same time, it's growing at home through franchising and acquisition to circumvent stiff Belgian restrictions on big companies opening new stores.

GB-Inno was founded in the late 19th century as Grand Bazaar, Belgium's first department store. Now it boasts stores in eight countries under names such as Quick and Pizza Hut (fast-food chains); Vetir (clothing stores in France); Handy Andy and Scotty's (home improvement stores in the U.S.); and Nopri, Sarma and Unic (supermarkets).

The plan seems to be working so far. GB-Inno-owned companies control 15% of Belgium's retail sales, and Quick is ahead of McDonald's Corp. in Belgium, France and Luxembourg, and is second in many other major European markets.

The company last fall bought J.C. Penney Co.'s two Belgian supermarket chains, Sarma and Nopri, for $35 million. In other markets it has found a number of partners—Whitbread in the U.K., Penney in Belgium, Casino hypermarkets in France and a home improvement operator in Spain.

GB-Inno is No. 22 among retailers in sales in Europe, just behind Sears, Roebuck & Co. and the U.K.'s Boots Co., a drugstore chain and pharmaceuticals marketer.

Baron Francois Vaxelaire, chairman of GB-Inno and a descendant of one of the company's founding families, said the corporate strategy of partnering local companies in business ventures in new markets is key to its success. "A foreigner doesn't have a future," he said.

More than 80% of the company's 1987 net income of $50 million came from Belgium, but Baron Vaxelaire said, "We will continue to advance over our own frontiers."

The baron aims to double the company's profits within five years. Last year's profits were up 23.7% from 1986.

Eric Decroix, marketing manager for mass retail operations, executes GB-Inno's tactics. In a country where executives are still commonly promoted on the basis of seniority, GB-Inno is noted for grabbing high fliers.

Mr. Decroix, 35, worked his way up at Procter & Gamble Co. and was the first Belgian to become head of marketing at P&G Belgium. GB-Inno recruited him four years ago through a headhunter—an almost unheard-of occurrence in Belgium.

Already he has stepped up advertising for the supermarkets and begun an image campaign, a new tactic for retailers in this market.

GB-Inno's fastest-growing business is the Quick hamburger chain, started in 1970.

Patterned after McDonald's but with European touches, such as croissants instead of Egg McMuffins and french fries with mayonnaise, Quick is already ahead of the U.S. fast-food giant in a number of areas in Belgium, France and Luxembourg. This year, Quick plans to open 19 restaurants in Belgium, France and the U.K., for a total of 141 European units.

To speed up U.K. development, Quick last year went into partnership with the U.K. brewer Whitbread. Quick also has contracted with Casino hypermarkets in France to install fast-food Quick outlets in hypermarket parking lots.

In other areas, GB-Inno in the past year has bought 40% of Vetir, a local clothing marketer in France, and gone into partnership with a Spanish group to develop home improvement stores in Spain.

Exploiting its fast-food experience, GB-Inno is also the Belgian franchisee for PepsiCo's Pizza Hut chain.

The Penney deal gave GB-Inno the Nopri franchise supermarket chain of 194 stores and 49% of 73 Sarma convenience stores with the right to buy the rest of Sarma from Penney within five years.

Other major GB-Inno franchise operations in Belgium include 328 Unic supermarkets, the Christiansen toy chain and Brico home improvement stores.

Its own GB-Inno supermarkets and hypermarkets account for 8% of all retail trade in Belgium.

The GB-Inno supermarkets are stepping up their advertising, hiring former Quick agency DDB Needham Worldwide here to do an image campaign in a series of print ads that stress the quality of wine and meat sections.#

begins to go in circles. If people are everywhere essentially the same, if they have the same attitudes and desires, which in turn can be fulfilled by the same products, then marketers are going to deliver sameness, benefiting as they do from enormous economics of scale," he said. "Perceived consumer parity becomes a cause of actual and, therefore, perceived brand parity."

This often leads to parity in advertising, he said. That's ironic because it's the "very purpose of advertising to differentiate brands in the consumer's mind and to minimize brand parity where it does exist."

Mr. Rosenshine said this leads to the often-debated question of whether global messages—solely addressing consumer commonalities—can overcome pre-established levels of perceived brand parity—or whether global advertising will make the problem worse.#

Stalled relationship with Y&R halted

CDP drives toward U.S.

By LAUREL WENTZ and NANCY GIGES

The sale of Young & Rubicam's 37% interest in Collett Dickenson Pearce's CISA European network is no surprise. After all, it became clear a year after the linkup in 1983 that Y&R had provided nothing more than an investment role.

Collett Dickenson Pearce is eyeing the U.S. now that the agency has built up a European network. The U.S. entry, which CDP Chairman John Spearman said he hopes to accomplish within a year, will be without Y&R.

A key intention at the start was for Y&R to serve as a matchmaker to help CDP form a European network.

However, cultural and personality clashes between the prospective partners, as well as diagreements over who would hold the controlling interest in member agencies, apparently nixed any deals that Y&R tried to facilitate.

One anticipated linkup that failed to materialize was with Boulet, Dru, Dupuy, Petit, Paris.

Eventually, CDP found affiliates on its own. By then, Y&R changed priorities as its own network became stronger in Europe, and the New York-based agency began to view its role as purely one of investment.

Until this month, Y&R owned 37% of CISA, the Luxembourg-based holding company that owns 100% of the CDP agency in London and stakes in three other European agencies. Y&R's initial interest in using CDP to build a second international network dwindled as Y&R formed new networks with France's Havas Conseil and Japan's Dentsu, sources said.

Y&R's strategies changed. For example, Prins Meijer Stamenkovits & van Walbeek, Amsterdam, 40% owned by Y&R and bought to be added to CDP's network, was instead merged with Y&R Amsterdam.

Y&R Europe President Joe DeDeo, who was largely responsible for putting the CDP deal together, said Y&R considered the CDP stake an investment.

At the start, however, Y&R sources were calling the deal "bigger than Dentsu."

"Y&R has been a good and sympathetic partner, with moral support as much as anything else," Mr. Spearman said. Y&R's 1983 acquisition of part of the agency enabled CDP to buy itself back from Hambros Bank, a U.K. merchant bank that owned 75% of CDP, he said.

Privately, Y&R sources admitted the whole effort was one in which "no part of the mixture seemed to work." That was why Y&R stepped back from an active role.

CISA now owns a majority share in Italian agency Canard and Spanish agency Grupo Barro and a minority share in France's Alice. West German agency Springer & Jacoby became an affiliate agency this year, but no equity changed hands.

Mr. Spearman said it would be "confusing" to have a U.S. agency as an investor in the agency as well as another U.S. partner. He wouldn't elaborate on the status of any discussions toward a U.S. deal.

CDP could be better off in the U.S. without Y&R, judging by Y&R's experience with its recent investment in Lord Einstein O'Neill & Partners, the breakaway agency from Lord, Geller, Federico, Einstein. Y&R's minority ownership may be causing Lord Einstein some problems in pursuing clients.

For instance, Y&R's Eastman Kodak Co. business reportedly was a factor in Lord Einstein's decision not to pursue the Fuji Film account.#

New Age radio is breaking with tradition again—this time with its approach to advertisers.

The eclectic format has emerged as a viable alternative for advertisers targeting upscale audiences. But because the stations don't garner high ratings, they court advertisers through less traditional means: qualitative audience information and customized radio spots.

The format—a combination of fusion jazz, instrumental and soft rock music—has been adopted by 35 stations in the U.S., primarily in major markets including Chicago, Cleveland, Detroit, Los Angeles, San Diego and San Francisco.

"It is fairly experimental . . . but it's already identified a verifiable need" for an alternative format, said Mark Ramsey, research director at Bolton Research.

An analysis of 11 New Age stations conducted by Cody/Leach Broadcast Architecture, a Princeton, N.J.-based research company, found the average Arbitron Ratings Co. rating to be a 2 share among listeners 12 and older. In larger markets, a 7 or 8 share is considered strong.

"If [New Age stations] use numbers, they have a problem. Numbers don't tell their story," said Susan McAnally, media buyer for N W Ayer, Los Angeles. "It's a unique, specialized format that doesn't show up in the book."

The stations "have trouble meeting cost per point; it's more a conceptual buy," and stations are apt to lose out on mass-appeal buys, she said.

New Age "will never be a top five or six station," added Jim Duncan, publisher of American Radio, an industry publication.

Still, New Age stations offer a quality audience: upper-income, highly educated adults ages 25 to 54. They also generally air only eight spot breaks per hour, compared with 10 or 12 for contemporary hit stations.

But the exclusivity of the audience has posed problems by removing the stations from consideration of the biggest mass-market advertisers.

The most ad dollars for New Age have come from airlines, banks, high-end car dealers, posh retailers and beer and wine marketers.

To woo advertisers, some stations produce spots free, tailored to the format. About half the local advertisers have Chicago station WNUA-FM produce spots at no charge, said Michael Donovan, VP-general manager.

"It is in the advertiser's best interest to design spots targeted to the environment. People won't accept things that are incongruent, and stations don't like seeing listeners jarred," Mr. Ramsey said.

For example, local car dealers often believe the louder the spot the better, but that's inappropriate for the format, Mr. Donovan said.

WNWV-FM discourages hard-sell spots, said Charlie Schnell, general sales manager at the Cleveland station. For example, he persuaded a waterbed retailer to alter its commercial from an aggressive price-oriented pitch to a discussion of relaxation teamed with soothing water sound effects.

Many stations themselves strictly control the type of advertising they accept. Allan Chlowitz, VP-general manager at KTWV-FM, Los Angeles, considered the prototypical New Age station, has rejected spots that clashed with the mellow format. But he wouldn't elaborate on which spots were rejected.

The approach seems to be working.

"We are doing better [in ad revenues] in our first 15 months than we were with album-oriented rock," Mr. Chlowitz said. He wouldn't disclose figures. Mr. Duncan estimates KTWV earns about $1 million a month in revenues.

KTWV posted a 3.7 share of listeners ages 25 to 54 in Arbitron's winter 1988 survey, up from a 3.6 share for fall 1987. The fall survey was from Sept. 24 to Dec 16; the winter survey ran from Jan. 7 to March 30.

WNUA in Chicago earned a 2.3 share in Arbitron's winter survey, down from a 3 share. But cash sales for April 1988 were up almost 250% compared with the year before, when the station was classic rock-formatted WRXR-FM, according to the Chicago Area Broadcasters Radio revenue report.

WNWV's billings are 2½ times better than a year ago, when the station was heavy metal WCZR-FM, said Gary Kneisley, general manager.

The growth of the format also can be attributed to the growth of satellite distribution, as well as the entry of more and bigger players.

One distributor, Satellite Music Network, Dallas, expects to have 100 affiliates by 1990, up from its current nine (AA, Oct. 12).

Even with the help of ABC Radio, which sells time and is buying 20% of the Satellite Music Network, the music network's gross revenues for 1987 fell 5.1% to $14.9 million, compared with 1986. Ad revenues dropped 9% to $9.47 million.

Progressive Music Network, Minneapolis, has added 16 affiliates since introducing its satellite format, The Breeze, in September. It soon will add nine more. Its first affiliate, KEYF-FM, Spokane, Wash., posted a 4.5 share in Arbitron's fall 1987 survey, up from [illegible] in the previous survey when it featured older adult contemporary programming.

Jack Moore, president-general manager, has upped original estimates of 60 affiliates at the end of three years to 80 in two years.

Some speculate New Age may go the way of disco music. "I worry that it is a trend or a fad and that it may go by the wayside," Ms. McAnally said.

But others disagree. "This music has been around for 12 years," said Frank Cody, formerly program director of KTWV and now a partner in Cody/Leach. "It was not manufactured like disco. . . . This music will not go away."#

'New Age' label stirs wave of puzzlement

PHILADELPHIA—A New Age station by any other name would sound . . . better.

That's the opinion of some stations having problems with the name "New Age." Some listeners mistake New Age for New Wave, a brash style of rock music, and react negatively, said Michael Donovan, VP-general manager, WNUA-FM, Chicago. He said the station tries to explain its format with the ad theme "Music for a new age."

Other stations say the name doesn't effectively position them in the marketplace.

"We're not finding a negative connotation as much as it just doesn't describe us in a way that listeners hold onto," said Gailya Silhan, VP-general manager, KOAI-FM, Dallas.

Perhaps most worrisome is the association with "New Age" mysticism, which has been popularized by Shirley MacLaine.

As stations try to distance themselves from negative associations, other descriptions are taking hold. The most widely used is "Soundtrack," as in "Soundtrack for southern California" at KTWV-FM.

Other stations sidestep the problem by eschewing all classifications and tout their entertainment as "The new way to relax" and "Stressless music for a stressful life."

Dave Kendrick, general manager of KKSF-FM, San Francisco, said he prefers "new adult contemporary," which he said is much more acceptable to advertisers.#

Goodwill Games face ad hurdle

By JO BETH McDANIEL

ATLANTA—With about two years to go before the 1990 Goodwill Games in Seattle, Turner Broadcasting System has no sponsors, no ad contracts and no athletes—just 85 hours of programming planned for a 17-day stretch.

No problem.

Two years before the 1986 Goodwill Games, the event was still just an idea in the fertile mind of Ted Turner. Forging an agreement with the Soviets for their participation took most of 1984 and 1985, leaving just 11 months to organize for opening day in Moscow.

"A lot of people didn't know about the Games in 1986," said Ellen Stone, TBS sales and marketing manager for the Goodwill Games. "It all happened so fast and furious."

TBS lost $26 million on that first version of the Goodwill Games.

Yet in early May, despite the company's well-publicized billion-dollar debts, TBS extended its commitment to the Games, announcing plans to hold them in 1994 and 1998 (AA, May 16).

TBS had committed to the 1990 Games back in 1985.

Company executives expect to break even or make a small profit on the 1990 event.

TBS is running through yearend in marketing and sports trade magazines a series of seven print ads promoting the Games and plans to increase advertising during 1989 and 1990.

Its ad budget for the Games is more than $10 million, including the airtime for promotions on TBS' Cable News Network, CNN Headline News and WTBS, said Farrell Reynolds, president of TBS Broadcasting Sales, a TBS division.

Executives say most of the problems of the first Games have been corrected.

This time, there's more time to organize: Eleven months wasn't long enough to woo and sign sponsors, Mr. Reynolds said.

"Sponsors need at least 18 months in order to plan promotional backups. Look what Kodak and Federal Express have done with the Olympics. They're on the air with tie-ins eight to 12 months prior to the event," he said.

It was also difficult to sign cable systems to carry the 1986 Goodwill Games. "Finding stations that could clear 129 hours was difficult at best," he said.

Because of that hurdle, the Games were syndicated to independent stations, diluting the ratings.

"The ones we got . . . weren't always the strongest stations in the market," Mr. Reynolds said.

The event's disappointing 3 rating from A.C. Nielsen Co. was due to problems that won't exist this time around, he said, including the fact that in 1986, all the live coverage aired in daytime.

He said the company expects between a 7 and an 8 rating this time.

The 1990 Games will be shown exclusively on cable TV. Already, at least 20 major cable systems, reaching more than 20 million homes, have signed up to carry the feed, paying about $1 per subscriber.

TBS is seeking $50 million in sponsorships and advertising for 1990, more than double the $20 million in advertising from the 1986 Games. Sponsorship packages of $4 million, $5 million and $6 million will include 30-second TV spots, promotional tie-ins, category exclusivity and hospitality packages including tickets and hotel rooms.

Plenty of venue advertising will be available at the Goodwill Games.

"Ideally, we'd like every sport to have its own sponsor," Ms. Stone said. "Realistically, we hope to get 10 to 15 major sponsors. They don't necessarily have to align themselves with a sport."

While Ms. Stone expects to sign the first sponsor by mid-August, no advertiser from the 1986 Games—including Gillette Co., Prudential-Bache Securities and Stroh Brewery Co.—has made a commitment to the 1990 Games.

The Seattle-based organizing committee also is rounding up local and regional sponsors, and TBS is urging cable systems to develop grass-roots promotions.

TBS recently hired sales-promotion agency Frankel & Co., Chicago, to "approach potential sponsors, show them the whole big picture a sponsor can take advantage of," Ms. Stone said.

Despite finishing in the red, Ms. Stone said that the 1986 Goodwill Games were a success: Six world records were broken; TBS won four Emmys from the telecast, including one for largest remote ever produced; and it was the first time in 10 years that Soviet and U.S. athletes competed in such a broad range of events.

"A lot was made of the company losing $25 million in 1986," Ms. Stone said. "If you looked at any major sporting events in their first years, they wouldn't be anything like they are now. We're hoping to turn this into something great."#

TV ad spending in sports shows does high jump

NEW YORK—Ignited by the Winter Olympics on ABC-TV, advertising on network sports programming nearly doubled in the first quarter of 1988 compared with a year ago, says the Television Bureau of Advertising.

TvB figures showed that network sports advertising totaled $763.2 million for the January-to-March period, nearly double last year's $381.8 million.

Network sports programming made up 31.1% of all network TV spending in the first quarter, up from 18% for all of 1987.

The higher figures were due largely to high Olympic spending. Of the top 25 advertisers on network sports programming, only two—General Motors Corp. and United Air Lines—weren't Olympic advertisers.

Chrysler Corp. was the leading network sports advertiser, spending $60.2 million in the first quarter of 1988, a 410.2% increase from $11.8 million for the same period last year. Anheuser-Busch was second with $40.9 million, up 50%.

Rounding out the top five sports advertisers were GM ($33.7 million, up 15.8%), Philip Morris Cos. ($29.7 million, up 100%), and Ford Motor Co. ($20.7 million, up 491.4%).#

AAF backs new PAC for industry

By STEVEN W. COLFORD

Los Angeles—The American Advertising Federation has taken a major step toward creating an industrywide political action committee for the advertising and media businesses.

The plan approved by the AAF board would support establishment of an independent PAC that wouldn't be linked directly to the AAF or any other existing industry group, federation officials said.

Executives at the Association of National Advertisers and the American Association of Advertising Agencies later may lend their support to the project but had no comment last week.

The AAF already sponsors its own political action committee, AD PAC. The ANA has authorized creation of a PAC Campaign 'misdirected'

By JUDANN DAGNOLI

Lakeland, Fla.—Orange juice may be just for breakfast, after all.

The Florida Citrus Commission's orange juice ad campaign is in trouble because Coca-Cola Foods, marketer of Minute Maid orange juice, believes the longtime "Not just for breakfast anymore" advertising is "not strategically sound" and aimed at "never-never land."

Some commissioners also blasted the advertising—and other efforts for grapefruit juice and fresh citrus—as sparks flew at what was to be a routine budget meeting here last week.

Saatchi & Saatchi DFS Compton, New York, handles the orange juice and grapefruit juice business for the commission, representing $18.2 million and $6.7 million in spending, respectively, while Fry/Hammond/Barr, Orlando, handles the $6 million fresh-citrus business.

Those figures represent budget increases for 1988-89 ap-

Parched products

Drought threatens a shift in media budgets

An Advertising Age roundup

The drought plaguing the nation's farmers probably won't shrivel up marketing dollars any time soon. But if it persists, there could come a dry spell in product introductions and media spending by food companies forced to pay more for commodities.

At the very least, the drought may mean a rejiggering of marketing budgets to accommodate higher retail prices.

Diamandis Communications Inc.'s Woman's Day already has felt the heat, said Gregory Coleman, VP-national sales manager.

"The drought has meant a short-term reaction here," he said. "We've seen some [media] budgets cut—not because of a low supply of the product but because the company is concerned about overall profitability. We are hearing lots of question marks from food producers in the Midwest."

Media buyers reported scattered cutbacks by food marketers, hedging their bets by trimming third and fourth-quarter spot TV buys.

"We're already seeing some cancellations of advertising. As commodity prices go up, some companies can't follow directly by raising prices," said Hal Katz, exec VP, Vitt Media International, a New York-based buying company. "To preserve margins, advertising is being pulled."

Mr. Katz wouldn't say which companies are pulling advertising, citing client confidentiality.

Media sources said CPC International's Best Foods division has trimmed substantially its fourth-quarter spending for Hellmann's mayonnaise.

Soybean oil is a key ingredient for salad dressings, oils and shortenings.

Most major food marketers—including Campbell Soup Co., ConAgra, General Mills, Kellogg Co., Quaker Oats Co. and Ralston Purina Co.—though concerned, remain staunchly committed to their new-product plans and high levels of ad spending.

"We haven't seen any effect on marketing yet," said Howard Liszt, exec VP-general manager at Campbell-Mithun, Minneapolis, which handles General Mills, Land O'Lakes and Cargill.

"We'll know a lot more in a month," he said, "but I don't think even increased costs of crops would affect food marketers' support of their brands or would cause them to delay the introduction of new products. They'd let margins suffer first."

A Campbell spokesman said the company wouldn't have to decide on advertising or marketing cutbacks until late this year or early next year. Even then, he said, Campbell would prefer to cut costs in other areas.

"The problem is that there isn't a recent precedent to

Coke takes Pepsi's challenge to the TV nets

Cola wars return with a diet fight

By PATRICIA WINTERS
and PATRICK McGEEHAN

Pepsi-Cola Co. opens a new round in the cola wars tonight with a taste-test "challenge" commercial claiming victory for Diet Pepsi over rival Diet Coke.

Coca-Cola Co. has taken the challenge and late last week asked the three TV networks not to run the spot.

Pepsi's planned summerlong campaign—claiming "Americans preferred the taste of Diet Pepsi over Diet Coke 55% to 45%"—starts with a new spot featuring heavyweight boxing champ Mike Tyson. It will air tonight during a 9 p.m. (ET) "roadblock" on all three networks.

"Our research continues to show that Diet Coke beats Diet Pepsi," said Carlton Curtis, Coca-Cola spokesman. "We just aren't going to let these kinds of claims go unchallenged."

He said the networks "accepted" Coca-Cola's protest and are looking at test results from both companies before deciding. The process normally takes about two weeks, he said.

The networks couldn't be reached for comment at press time, and Pepsi said its new effort will break as planned.

The new Tyson spot leads into a network TV, radio and print campaign breaking June 28 that promotes the taste tests. The effort also includes nationwide in-store taste tests for consumers.

Tonight's 30-second spot shows Mr. Tyson in a post-fight interview telling reporters there was no question who was going to win the fight. It soon becomes clear Mr. Tyson is talking about Diet Pepsi beating Diet Coke, the category leader. BBDO Worldwide, New York, is the agency.

The spot will be broadcast before the Tyson-Leon Spinks bout, which is on closed-circuit TV, and will also air during the fight on closed-circuit.

The heavyweight battle in Atlantic City, N.J., is one of the more hyped matches in boxing history; Pepsi paid $3.5 million to be the exclusive sponsor. When

Dow plans regional magazine

By JOBETH McDANIEL

ATLANTA—Dow Jones & Co. is close to approving a 1989 launch of SouthStreet, a monthly regional business publication that would represent the company's long-anticipated move into magazine publishing.

Dow Jones has struggled in recent years with several prototype magazine projects, but all projects were put on hold in late November as its flagship newspaper, The Wall Street Journal, was hit by sagging ad linage following the Oct. 19 stock market plunge.

Those earlier plans included a national business magazine.

However, it has a prototype in hand of a regional business magazine to be based here. The magazine, which has been shown to several ad agencies, would be sent free to all Southeastern WSJ subscribers.

"It's an idea that's been kicking around for a while," said John Huey, the Journal's Atlanta bureau chief, who took a leave of absence to lead the team working on the SouthStreet prototype. "From an editorial standpoint, there's a demand for regionally tailored editorial."

Dow Jones has been showing great interest in magazines. Late last year, it took a minority interest in Mediatex Communications Corp., publisher of Texas Monthly.

If SouthStreet is approved by Dow Jones, the color,

TLK opens up int'l route with French shop

By SCOTT HUME
and CLAIRE WILSON

Tatham-Laird & Kudner Chairman-CEO Charlotte Beers got what she wanted last week. It remains to be seen, however, whether the agency got what it needs.

Chicago-based TLK finally tied the knot with France's RSCG Corp., after flirting with almost every major multinational agency network as well as such independents as Chiat/Day and Hill, Holliday, Connors, Cosmopulos.

Under terms of the deal, Ms. Beers becomes a fifth owner of RSCG. TLK President William Youngclaus and Chief Creative Officer Ralph Rydholm also get a cut of the RSCG action through ownership shares.

In turn, RSCG founders Bernard Roux, Jacques Seguela, Alain Cayzac and Jean-Michel Goudard become "significant" partners of TLK.

The combination of TLK's perhaps $250 million in billings with RSCG's $1 billion-plus creates a network that ranks approximately as the world's 19th-largest agency group.

"We have had an exchange of ownership," Ms. Beers said in an interview in Cannes, France, where she was attending the International Advertising Awards Film Festival. "They are a French corporation, and we are a partnership. A good part of the time was spent working out how we could make the exchange in an equitable way."

An affiliation between the two had been rumored for some time.

Ms. Beers declined to reveal details, but a source who's had acquisition discussions with RSCG noted the Paris-based agency wouldn't take less than a majority share in any deal it might have made in the U.S.

Ms. Beers and Mr. Seguela both will hold the title of vice chairman of RSCG.

She's said to have turned down

Pillsbury puts heat on Ayer

Burger King sales down 2%

By SCOTT HUME

N W Ayer's honeymoon on the $200 million Burger King account, if it ever had one, is over.

In fact, it may not be a $200 million account much longer.

There are new postnuptial agreements, and Ayer's advertising is certain to be more closely scrutinized by Burger King parent Pillsbury Co. and nervous BK executives. Pillsbury last week expressed disappointment with the agency's "We do it like you do it" campaign, and financial analysts suggest it may force Burger King Corp. to place more dollars in promotion while trimming media spending through Ayer.

The sudden resignations last week of J. Jeffrey Campbell, 44, chairman of Pillsbury's Restaurant Group, and Kyle Craig, 40, chairman-ceo of its S&A Restaurant Group, are indicative of Pillsbury's new, tougher mood.

One Pillsbury source said Mr. Campbell "was the buffer between the restaurant people and agencies, and the hard-nosed, flour-processing guys in Minneapolis. With him gone, it's not going to be easier for anyone on the restaurant side."

It was Messrs. Campbell and Craig who six years ago had BK on a sales roll with their "Battle of the Burgers" marketing strategy. Mr. Campbell was BK's president and Mr. Craig its senior VP-marketing.

But now they're out because New York-based Ayer's attempt to recreate those glory days by reviving the "flame-broiling beats frying" market position is falling flat.

Analysts put BK sales for the first quarter at least 2% below year-earlier levels.

Another source close to the company said that "the sheer size of the account" is "what's saving Ayer now." He said, "If this were a $25 million account, they'd be gone. But because it's $200 million, [Pillsbury Chairman William] Spoor has to stick with them and trust that they can get it together."

Charles Olcott, 41, has been promoted to president-chief operating officer of the chain's worldwide operations, taking over responsibilities previously held by Mr. Campbell.

Formerly president of U.S. operations, Mr. Olcott is the man who, with since-resigned Senior VP-Marketing R.J. Trutz, picked Ayer to replace J. Walter Thompson USA.

"The honeymoon's over," said John McMillin, food analyst at Prudential-Bache Securities. He made that assertion following criticism of Ayer's advertising by Pillsbury's chief financial officer, Roger Headrick, at an analysts' meeting in Minneapolis.

Mr. Headrick told the analysts BK would focus more on promotions while making changes in advertising. He said Ayer's copy needs to be "strengthened."

The "We do it" campaign hasn't produced the desired sales increases, Mr. McMillin said, because "it wasn't designed to help sales but to build a 'theme.' " He said that was a strategic mistake that will have to be corrected.

An Ayer spokesman said new BK commercials set to break this fall "will not represent a thematic change." He said the "We do it" theme "is beginning to get recognition and recall."

Jerry Siano, Ayer vice-chairman, said the executive changes are "a good thing as it relates to our relationship. It gives more focus and more responsibility to the guy who

A lot of consumers noticed the Marlboro Man last month, but they may have looked at him a bit askance.

In the wake of U.S. Surgeon General C. Everett Koop's declaration that cigarette smokers are nicotine addicts, it seems only fitting that the world's most unrepentant cigarette smoker should appear on the list of the best-recalled advertising.

Philip Morris Cos.' Marlboro advertising, which took the No. 9 spot in May's top 10 list, last appeared on the monthly adWatch survey of best-recalled ads in March 1987.

With what age group did the Marlboro Man register the highest recall? Nearly half of those who said Marlboro was the first advertising that came to mind were 18 to 24 years old.

Also making a rare appearance among the top 10 last month (its last appearance was in August 1986) was 7UP. The Uncola continues to advertise under the "Feels so good comin' down" theme, with TV commercials featuring happy people dancing in the rain. That approach may have become even more memorable during the past month's drought across much of the country.

But 7UP's improved recall score likely was spurred by some much more positive news than that which helped Marlboro's score: On April 25, Seven-Up Co. began a $15 million-plus campaign for its new 7UP Gold soft drink (AA, April 25).

Leo Burnett USA, Chicago, is the agency for both Marlboro and 7UP, as well as for McDonald's Corp., which tied for No. 4.

Pepsi-Cola repeated as the best-recalled advertiser last month, followed by Coca-Cola, Anheuser-Busch's Budweiser/Bud Light; Ford; McDonald's; the California Raisin Advisory Board; Chevrolet; Miller Brewing Co.'s High Life/-Genuine Draft/Miller Lite trio; and Marlboro and 7UP.

AdWatch is a joint project of ADVERTISING AGE and SRI Research Center, Lincoln, Neb. Advertising awareness is measured by asking a nationally projectable sample to name the advertising that comes to mind both overall and in specific product categories.

Last month, 1,000 adults were polled by telephone.

While Marlboro and 7UP had dramatic increases in awareness, several other well-known brands suffered uncharacteristic declines.

One of those was McDonald's. Its advertising remained among the 10 best-recalled overall, but when the 1,000 respondents specifically were asked which fast-food advertising came to mind first, McDonald's share of first mentions was 41.3%.

Although still comfortably leading the category, that share is 4.8 percentage points below the 46.1% share it got in April.

McDonald's decline follows, but is not necessarily a result of, a subtle change in its TV and radio creative. New music backs its "Good time, great taste" theme for the first time in four years.

Rival Burger King Corp. didn't benefit from McDonald's decline: BK's first mentions totaled 13.2% in May, down 2.9 points from 16.1% in April. No. 3 Wendy's International rose slightly to 7.4% from 6.5%.

In the computer category, IBM Corp. lost some of the ground it gained in April. Its share of first mentions in the May survey was 20.4%, down 4.1 percentage points. In April, IBM's recall had jumped 6.8 points to a 24.5%.

Apple Computer remained the leader last month with a 28.1% share, up slightly from its 26.7% in April. AT&T Co. took the No. 3 spot with a 1.8% share, dislodging Radio Shack (1.7%).#

Revenues of the 100 Leaders, paced by big gains in cable, increased 11.5% to $64.7 billion as acquisitions and divestitures juggle the lineup

By R. CRAIG ENDICOTT

Media revenues for the nation's leading media companies surged 11.5% in 1987 to $64.7 billion as cable continued its steady march to overtake returns from other media forms, according to ADVERTISING AGE's eighth annual 100 Leading Media Companies report.

Cable, once the weak sister in volume size to broadcast, magazines and newspapers, charted a 24.3% increase over 1986 in reaching revenues of $9.2 billion, just $100 million short of total magazine revenues generated by this year's AD AGE 100.

In the process, cable moved from 12.8% to 14.3% of the total media. It cracked the $1 billion advertising revenue barrier. This year, upfront buying of cable showed significant strength. Cable's big got bigger mainly through acquisition—Tele-Communications Inc. vaulted to No. 17 from No. 23 a year ago on an 86.9% gain in revenues, largely through cable buys. Innovative media forms like video home shopping continue to be spun from cable.

Also reflecting the industry's strength, three first-time entries to the 100 Media chart were cable companies. In the eight years of this issue, they influenced the biggest year-to-year jump in revenues necessary for entry to the list—from a cutoff of $100.1 million in 1986 to $133.4 million this year.

Acquisitions and divestitures affected more than cable numbers. Among the top 10 companies—again paced by Capital Cities/ABC at $4.3 billion, virtually a billion dollar lead over No. 2 Time Inc.—CBS Inc. dropped from No. 4 to No. 5 mainly from the sale of CBS Magazines.

AD AGE permits the top 100 to restate prior year figures to reflect current operations, and then ranks both comparable years on the basis of these restated revenues. Without this adjustment, CBS revenues would have dropped 14.3%. As it was, revenues from continuing operations fell only 1.6%. The other big change was Hearst Corp. Its newly acquired Houston Chronicle powered Hearst to No. 10 from No. 12 a year ago.

Media companies continue to be strong bottom-line performers evidenced by an average growth of 12.2% in net income on a 15.2% increase in revenues among 49 of the public companies. While there are 54 publicly traded companies in the AD AGE 100, five of these—3M, Warner Communications, General Electric Co., Westinghouse Electric Corp. and International Thomson Holdings—hold such a small percentage of their business in media that including their gross figures distorts the financial strength of the media-oriented companies. Among the 49 public companies, therefore, revenues from media grew 11.1%, although media as a percentage of their total revenues dropped to 77.9% from 80% in 1986.

Among the public companies, No. 89 LIN Broadcasting with 66% of its revenues derived from media, had a 36.9% return on sales for the highest ratio. However, most of this gain was credited to its growth in the cellular radio-telephone business, considered non-media for the purpose of this listing.

Ten companies suffered a negative return on sales, and seven of those were cable companies whose declines were influenced by expenses related to acquisitions and capital-intensive system building.

Second to LIN in return on sales was Toronto-based Thomson Newspapers, although its operating results show the bittersweet side of foreign investing in the U.S. Thomson lamented that the decline of the U.S. dollar held revenues and operating income to 7% and 4% gains, respectively.

Nonetheless, foreign-based media companies continued to build their U.S. media base. Their total revenues grew to $3.92 billion from the 100's nine that are based abroad, a growth of 39.2% from seven contributors in 1986. Foreign companies in this issue are ranked by their U.S. media revenues.

Acquisitions largely contributed to the growth and placement on the Top 100 for foreign entries—No. 53 Hachette Group and No. 52 Reuters Holdings PLC. Hachette's ticket to the 100 came through its purchase of Diamandis Publications for $722 million.

Revenues at Cahners Publishing Co., No. 48, part of Reed International PLC, London, advanced 27.3%, with at least part of that coming from the acquisition of Modern Bride and Variety.

Newspapers continue to be the dominant medium in the local markets. A report on the 10 hottest markets in this issue found that newspapers represented an average of 37.3% of the ad dollars from five media sources in the top 50 markets. Of the other media, TV claimed 33.5%, magazines 15.2%, radio 11.8% and outdoor 2.2%. (See Page S-13.)

In that same report, Miami was crowned the hottest market on the basis of an ad spending level of $597.93 per household in the market, but newspaper ad spending far outstripped the average for the 50 in totaling $259.90 per household, or 43.5% of the market total.

Newspaper revenues in the AD AGE 100 topped all media reported with $23.2 billion in 1987, up 11.8% from the prior year. Of the total media, the newspaper category grew in revenues a tenth of a percentage point to 35.9%.

McClatchy Newspapers, Sacramento, and Scripps Howard, Cincinnati—two traditional newspaper companies—joined a trend among closely held, often family-run businesses to go public while keeping much of the stock within their group. Capital from the public markets is expected to be funneled into new acquisitions.

Growth kingpins among the top 100 Media Companies were the video shopping networks, especially Home Shopping Network where computer terminal operators are quick to fill personal requests and build on HSN's revenue base of $582.1 million in 1987, up from $160.2 million. Cable Value Network reported $196.2 million in revenues in only eight months of operation.

The top newspaper company among the 100, No. 4 Gannett Co., grew 12.3% in newspaper revenues, although 1987 marked the first time Gannett had not acquired a newspaper property in years.

Several newspaper companies leveraging acquisitions also fell prey to the October tailspin in the financial markets. Goodson Newspaper Group, which invests in newspapers via No. 24 Ingersoll Publications, was forced to restructure its agreement to purchase the Morristown (N.J.) Daily Record from all-cash to cash and notes when it could not obtain financing. No. 22 Media News Group reduced its cash payment but increased its financing in a restructured deal with the Toronto Sun Publishing Corp. to purchase the Houston Post.

Newspaper companies dropping from last year's Top 100 are Warren Buffett's Berkshire Hathaway, Omaha, Neb., which had revenues of $123 million in 1987, all from The Buffalo News, and Topeka, Kan.-based Stauffer Communications, which totaled $116.9 million, mostly from newspapers.

Broadcasting as a percentage of the 100's total media dropped to 24.9% in 1987 from 26.5% in 1986 as revenues grew only 4.6% to $16.1 billion.

Sales were heavy in the medium, which includes TV and radio. Kohlberg Kravis Roberts & Co., a New York investment company, sold its Storer TV units to Gillett Holdings, Nashville, pushing Gillett onto the Ad Age 100 as No. 49.

Taft Broadcasting dissolved by spinning off properties largely to two companies, both of which made the 100 for the first time—No. 77 Great American Communications and No. 100 TVX Broadcasting Group. The only broadcast company to exit the 100 was Allbritton Communications, Washington.

Broadcasters who fell short of this year's cutoff were Jefferson-Pilot Communications, Greensboro, N.C., with $121.6 million in revenues; Univision, the New York-based Hispanic network and station operator with $121.5 million, and Cosmo Broadcasting, Greenville, S.C., with $103.5 million.

The 37 companies with cable revenues were paced by $1.62 billion in revenues generated by Time Inc. via its HBO movie channel and ATC Corp.

Four cable-oriented companies entered the chart in 1987. SCI Holdings, No. 23, was actually a name change for its owner, Kohlberg Kravis Roberts & Co., last year's No. 22. SCI Holdings won't be listed next year because it was purchased this spring by TCI and Comcast Corp., No. 58 this year. Comcast's ticket was its buyout of Group W Cable from No. 25 Westinghouse. CVN Cos., No. 73, rode in on the video home shopping craze that it has been feeding through its Cable Value Network. Cooke Media Group, No. 62, qualified on the basis of full-year returns from its McCaw Communications cable acquisitions made in 1986, although its revenues will shoot even higher this year because of its buyout of First Carolina Communications.

Heritage Communications, last year's No. 100, was the only cable company to drop off last year's chart, and that because of its buyout by TCI.

Because of the growth in cable, likely entries to next year's chart, if they remain independent, are Centel Cable Television, Oak Brook, Ill., with revenues of $130.1 million; Western Tele-Communications, Denver, $101.7 million, and Liberty, N.Y.-based Cablevision Industries Corp., which only last month agreed to acquire Wometco Cable TV in a deal valued at $725 million. Cablevision Industries had revenues of $92.9 million in 1987.

Magazine revenues for the 100 declined from 14.7% of the total in 1986 to 14.3% in 1987 on revenues of $9.3 billion, up 8.6%. Leading the revenue generators in this category was Time Inc. at $1.62 billion, up only 2.9% from the prior year. Ad revenue was down in People and Time magazines in 1987, although advertising gains were reported for the first quarter this year over the prior year period.

The magazine companies new to this year's 100 bought their way onto the list. Hachette bought out Diamandis Communications after it had taken over CBS Magazines in a management buyout. No. 93 Edgell Communications took the Harcourt Brace Jovanovich publications division in a management buyout. HBJ had been No. 75 last year.

Magazine companies previously among the 100 but not making the cutoff this year were this publication's parent, Crain Communications Inc., Chicago, with 1987 revenues of $128 million; Pittway Corp., Northbrook, Ill., with its Penton IPC Cleveland subsidiary reporting $125.1 million, and Knapp Communications, Los Angeles, with $110 million.

Other Top 100 magazine contenders are CMP Publications, Manhasset, N.Y., at $109.6 million, and Whittle Communications, Nashville, $106 million.

Among the "other" media category, which largely encompasses outdoor, free standing inserts, direct marketers and news wire services, revenues grew to $6.9 billion, up 13.6%.

New entries to the 100 included Reuters Holdings and the Associated Press, No. 61. Missing from this year's chart were Ackerley Communications, Seattle, which reported 1987 revenues of $116.4 million in outdoor and broadcast, and New York-based American Media Network, a.k.a. Winston Network, with $106 million. ■

Advertising in Yellow Pages hits $7.3 billion

By Kristine Stiven

Five fingers to do the walking through the Yellow Pages are no longer enough. Today even the quickest hand must race to keep up with the variety of books.

Yellow Pages advertising was a $7.3 billion industry in 1987, up 9% from 1986. This figure encompasses 98% of the directories published in the U.S. and 99% of the generated ad revenue.

The Business Publications Audit of Circulation, which began auditing directories in March 1987, currently lists 210 books, although this number represents less than 4% of all published directories.

While there is little argument about the size and strength of the industry, the companies involved, both utilities and independents, are fiercely protective of their directory revenue figures and rarely report numbers. This is the major reason ADVERTISING AGE has not included Yellow Pages as a media category in its 100 Leading Media Companies issue.

Bell South with $1 billion outdistances second-place GTE Corp., although the Bell South figure contains non-ad revenue from the publishing of white pages.

Likewise, the printing and publishing arm of General Telephone reports revenues of $860 million, but this figure includes a number of non-directory concerns.

Bell Atlantic's $800 million figure is relatively free of non-Yellow Page activity although the number is a company estimate.

NYNEX, one of the biggest Baby Bell publishers, would not break out its figures, but industry experts say it ranks in the top five.

Innovation and specialization are the current industry buzz words. They identify the proliferation of targeted directories and high-tech "talking Yellow Pages."

Companies involved in outdoor and "other" media among the 100 Leading Media Companies expanded their operations in 1987 in the process of building their revenue base to $6.9 billion, up 13.6% from the previous year.

"Other" media, which does not include print, broadcast and cable, is a compilation of free standing inserts, news services, data base subscription activity and some direct mail.

Outdoor, one of the larger categories of "other media," experienced nominal growth of 2.7% to $767 million in 1987 among the five 100 Leading Media Companies involved in the medium. These five companies, representing 59% of the $1.3 billion total estimated for all outdoor companies in 1987 according to the Institute of Outdoor Advertising, trailed the overall industry revenue growth rate of 4.1%.

The dollar volume increase among the five leader companies virtually came from the leader, 3M National Advertising, which outdistanced the pack with $217 million in revenues for a 10.1% gain. 3M's panel totals include permanent panels, a segment not audited by the Traffic Audit Bureau. TAB's structure totals are shown in the accompanying chart.

Outdoor expects growth of 6% in 1988 as the industry continues to rebound from reduced liquor and tobacco spending, says the IOA. Interestingly, healthcare advertising has been a growth area.

The success of the FSI business continues to show up in the nation's Sunday papers. Valassis Inserts, a division of Consolidated Press Holdings U.S., led the big three FSI companies—all of whom rank among the 100 Leading Media Companies—with a growth in revenues from FSIs of 23% to $400 million.

Valassis' current 49% share of market ballooned temporarily to 55% in November, 1987, with the acquisition of Newspaper Co-op Couponing, a division of Marketing Corp. of America, Westport, Conn.

Strong ad growth sustains newspapers

Revenues from newspaper properties of the top 100 Media companies continued to dominate all media segments in size with $23.2 billion, up 11.8% from 1987.

The total came from 47 companies with newspaper properties and represents 35.9% of all media revenues of the top 100, well ahead of broadcast's 24.9% share of the media pie for the 100.

Major acquisitions were generaled by Media News Group, controlled by William Dean Singleton. It paid Times Mirror Corp. $95 million for The Denver Post and paid Toronto Sun Publishing Corp. $150 million plus other considerations for The Houston Post. Hearst Corp. paid Houston Endowment $415 million for the Houston Chronicle.

Newspaper revenue growth at Media News hit $650 million, up 44.4% from the previous year when returns got a full-year infusion from the $110 million buyout in late 1986 of the Dallas Times Herald from Times Mirror Corp. Media News this month announced its intent to sell the Times Herald to John Buzzetta, one of Mr. Singleton's associates.

Hearst Corp.'s purchase of the Chronicle represented its first major newspaper acquisition in years and helped build corporate newspaper revenues to $650 million, up 66.7% from 1986. Hearst also folded the evening Albany (N.Y.) Knickerbocker News into the morning Albany Times-Union, continuing an industrywide trend that also saw Cox Enterprises combine the Evening Times in Palm Beach, Fla., with the morning Palm Beach Daily News and fold The Journal Herald in Dayton, O., into the Dayton Daily News.

Ralph Ingersoll of Ingersoll Publications built newspaper revenues to $609 million, a 64.6% increase largely attributed to first-time returns from the Morristown Newspaper Group and the $318 million buyout of Horvitz Newspaper Group consisting of four mid-sized Ohio newspapers and The Troy (N.Y.) Times Record. Thomson Newspapers $206.3 million buyout of four Clay Communications papers was the only other major purchase made by a top 100 Media company.

The bigger newspaper companies among the 47 seemed more bent on expanding into other media forms than into newspapers. For example, Gannett did not buy a paper in 1987, but it strengthened its broadcast segment with the purchase of two TV stations from Harte-Hanks Communications and began a broadcast version of USA Today called "USA Today: The Television Show"; Times Mirror bought four magazines from Diamandis Communications; Affiliated Publications moved into magazines with the purchase of Billboard Publications.

Four of the 47 companies with newspaper properties suffered revenue declines in 1987. Depressed market conditions affected A.H. Belo Corp. in Dallas and Opubco in Oklahoma City. Harte-Hanks' revenues dropped reflecting its sell-off activity, and News Corp. Ltd.'s newspaper revenues declined largely because of the depressed state of the New York Post, which News Corp. sold to real estate developer Peter Kalikow earlier this year for $37 million. The Post suffered a 25% decline in daily circulation.

But the Post is not alone in its slump. Circulation for all newspaper dailies dropped 0.07% from 1986 to 62.65 million. Sunday papers continued their circulation climb to 60.21 million, up 2.2%, according to Newspaper Advertising Bureau. NAB says advertising, which grew 9% in 1987, is expected to maintain that level of growth in 1988.

The fate of the proposed joint operating agreement between Gannett's The Detroit News and Knight-Ridder's Detroit Free Press remains in the hands of the Justice Department, which promises a ruling soon. ■

Magazine buys, specialties prod growth

Heavy acquisitions, vigorous start-up activity and flareups over the demythologizing of the use of the magazine rate card set the pace for stronger than expected growth in magazine revenues for the 35 companies involved in magazine publishing among the 100.

The group, which experienced narrow revenue growth of 6.4% in 1986, built that to 8.6% in 1987, although many of the larger magazine companies with broadly based consumer titles did not do as well.

The 35 stood out within their industry, however. For magazines as a whole, advertising rose to $8.2 billion in 1987, about 4% above the prior year but considerably lower than a projected 7.5% gain.

Magazines remained valued properties, if not on their own right then in the hands of an entrepreneur like Peter Diamandis. He first engineered a management buyout of CBS Magazines for $650 million, and then spun off four publications to Times Mirror Corp., one to Cahners Publications and the rest to Hachette for a total of $953.2 million.

Most of the CBS publications ended up under the direction of Mr. Diamandis at Hachette, the French company whose previous U.S. magazine interest had been the U.S. edition of Elle, held in joint venture with News Corp. Ltd.

Robert Edgell led a group in a $334.1 million management buyout of the technical professional publishing division of Harcourt Brace Jovanovich, which welcomed the deal to help offset its $3 billion recapitalization plan adopted to escape a takeover bid by Robert Maxwell, head of British Printing & Communications Corp.

Two magazine groups from last year's 100 Media chart appear this year under different corporate names: Edgell from HBJ and Hachette from CBS. One company, H&C Communications, left publishing by giving away its Washington Journalism Review to the College of Journalism at the University of Maryland.

In the more specialized area where growth was concentrated, both McGraw-Hill and Forbes Inc. showed revenue gains from magazines of 18.6% and 33.3%, respectively. Such growth was traced largely to their mass-circulated business magazines, Business Week and Forbes. BW recorded a phenomenal ad increase of 30.5% to $217.5 million on a 21% growth in ad pages, and Forbes' advertising grew 12.8% to $128.6 million on ad page growth of 6.1%, according to Publishers Information Bureau.

Their competitor, Time Inc.-owned Fortune, showed similar improvement, its advertising up 10.9% to $122 million on a 3.8% page growth, notes PIB, which also indicates the magazines continued to perform well in the first quarter of 1988, particularly Fortune, whose ad revenues ballooned 30.3%.

Time Inc., whose magazine revenues almost double those of its nearest competitor, Hearst Corp., could not carry off the Fortune success throughout its other properties as total revenues rose only 2.9% to $1.6 billion. Time did not increase its ad rates in 1988, the first year it has not since 1963.

Although Time didn't boost its rates, it was factored into Time Inc.'s special Max Plan—launched earlier in the year—which gaves discounts to advertisers that increase Time Inc.'s share (eight magazines) of their advertising budget.

Advance's Conde Nast Publications also offered a group magazine rate package for Bride's, Glamour, Mademoiselle, Self and Vogue, while Working Women-McCall's Group turned the industry on its ear by eliminating the rate card, which McCall's Publisher Dale Lang said merely formalized a practice followed by many of his competitors.

Specialized publications were the backbone of Cahners Publishing Co.'s 27.3% growth to $340 million in magazine revenues in 1987. The company continued to build on that sector with the acquisition this April of Today Communications, but it also entered the mass market through its purchase of Modern Bride and Variety, both in late 1987.

General Media International's purchase of Saturday Review may be the oddest fit among the magazine companies. General Media, the new name for Penthouse International, plans to relaunch Saturday Review this fall.

The outlook for magazines this year remains strong for most magazine categories. Results from the first quarter bear this out. Magazines monitored by PIB gained 11.4% in ad revenues on a 4% increase in ad pages. The general election and the Summer Olympics are expected to help sustain this growth throughout 1988.

Part of that growth no doubt will come from start-ups. Some 250 new start-ups a year have been recorded since 1984, according to Magazine Publishers of America, bringing 1987's total to 11,593. The flip slide of the issue, however, is that 90% of start-ups fail. ■

Sun Belt soars in revenue per household

By Norma Green

While scorching, rainless weather is drying up parts of the country, there appears to be no drought in total gross ad revenues per household in the 10 hottest U.S. media markets.

Miami, the growing international trade and financial center, muscled its way to the top on the strength of its newspaper, TV and radio revenues per household.

Miami, which ranks No. 1 in newspaper revenues per household and No. 2 in both TV and radio revenues, scored a revenue-per-household total of $597.93 to top the No. 2 hottest market, San Diego, at $585.32.

Source of Miami's media strength is its newspapers—Knight-Ridder with The Miami Herald, which boasts the largest circulation of any daily newspaper in the Southeast with 437,200 copies, The Miami News and the Spanish-language Diario Las Americas, along with the Tribune Co.-owned Fort Lauderdale News and Sun-Sentinel. These papers accounted for 43.5% of Miami's household revenue total by generating $259.90 in ad revenues per household.

In TV, which followed newspapers as the leading source of media income in the hottest markets, Miami was in the No. 2 slot with its ABC affiliate, WPLG, garnering a 22% share, the largest of any local stations rated during Nielsen's February sweeps.

Indicative of the hot TV market was General Electric's $270 million purchase in 1987 of WTVJ-TV.

Los Angeles was the top market in TV with $214.97 revenues per household with its KABC ranking at the top, also with a 22% share.

In radio, Miami was second only to San Diego in revenues per household. Of 19 viable stations identified by "Duncan's Radio Guide," only one San Diego station—KFMB—ranked in the listing of $10 million-plus billings. Ironically, Chicago's WGN, the top billing U.S. radio station with an estimated $31 million, was not a factor in the placement of the top ten because Chicago is ranked the 12th hottest media market overall.

Magazine revenues offered another twist as New York led the pack with $100.51 revenues per household but did not rank in the overall top 10 hottest markets. It was No. 20.

The Dallas-Fort Worth market demonstrates the advertising power of a competitive newspaper market. Dallas-Fort Worth's $578.92 revenues per household media total drew 41% or $237.54 from newspapers, the second highest newspaper figure among the top ten.

Denver rated in the lower half of the top ten media markets with sixth place in newspapers, seventh place in magazines and tenth in TV revenues. Denver was the only one of the top ten whose local TV advertising, total time sales and net revenues declined last year.

The most northern city in the hot media market lineup, Boston, ranked fourth in magazine revenues, as well as seventh in both newspaper and TV.

In absolute terms, the nation's largest ad market according to this report is New York with total expenditures of $3.01 billion in 1987. Los Angeles trails New York with $2.66 billion, then comes Chicago, $1.54 billion, San Francisco, $1.20 billion, and Boston, $1.09 billion.

The hottest media markets were determined by totaling local market ad spending for newspapers, magazines, TV, radio and outdoor for the nation's 50 largest Designated Market Areas as defined by A.C. Nielsen Co., and dividing the total by TV households in the respective DMA.

The local ad numbers show discretionary spending by advertisers, but in this study are not an attempt to reflect total dollars advertisers credit to various markets because the total also would include so-called uncontrolled allocations based on money a national advertiser would "attribute" to Miami for the exposure it got from buys made on network TV, network radio, national full-run magazine buys and USA Today. Most advertisers also believe local spending monitored by national ad tracking services is under-reported.

The top 50 DMAs, for example, represent about 50% of total local advertising spending in the U.S., according to this report, however, that percentage probably would rise to 60%-65% if national ad totals were added into these markets.

The 10 hottest should be viewed in relative terms—how they measure up against each other.

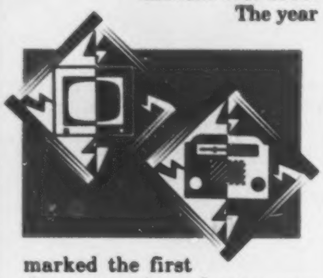
Broadcast delivers narrow revenue gains

Broadcasting is not the cash cow it was once. This issue's 46 media companies involved in broadcasting had a composite growth of only 4.6% in broadcast revenues in 1987 over the prior year—the lowest growth of any medium monitored among the 100.

The performance of broadcast properties, in this issue defined as TV and radio stations and their networks, is related directly to the economic swings of the national networks. Of the $16.1 billion in total broadcast revenue, $9.1 billion came from the networks—also a 4.6% increase over 1986. The year marked the first time prime-time ad rates were reduced by the networks. TV audience continued to decline and the networks retrenched by cutting budgets and paring staff.



Network ad growth also slowed to $8.8 billion for only a 3% gain over 1986, according to a report prepared for Ad Age by Robert J. Coen, senior VP-director of forecasting at McCann-Erickson Worldwide.

Siphoning some of the network dollars were the cable networks and News Corp. Ltd.'s Fox Broadcasting Co., which now includes seven owned-and-operated stations and 120 independent affiliates reaching more than 86% of the country.

Of the 46 companies among the 100 involved in broadcast, 25 had broadcast revenue growth of 2% or less.

Amid this frozen landscape, sizable broadcast blocks were exchanged. Gencorp, parent of RKO General, announced its intent to sell its beleaguered subsidiary that has faced license-renewal opposition among its various properties over the past few years. Pending is the sale of its KHJ-TV station in Los Angeles to Walt

Cable growth outpaces other media

Consolidation of cable holdings, a newly deregulated market, new cable services and sizable dollar increases in advertising were were influential in pushing cable revenues to $9.2 billion among the 100 Leading Media Companies, up 24.3% from the prior year.

The industry cracked the $1 billion ad revenue barrier for the first time in 1987. Total cable advertising grew 10.6% in 1987 to $1.08 billion, about $215 million on a local basis and $865 million in national buys, according to Robert J. Coen, senior VP-director of forecasting at McCann-Erickson Worldwide.

Acquisition fever continued to grip the industry. Tele-Communications Inc. not only led the pack in buyouts but drew the most criticism for the intensity of its effort.

TCI, one of the many Denver-based cable operators, early in the year paid $892 million for Des Moines-based Heritage Communications. Following an aborted attempt to purchase with other investors the SCI Holdings cable units from Kohlberg Kravis Roberts & Co. in early 1988, it finally bought out SCI with partner Comcast Corp. for $2.8 billion.

TCI in late 1987 also agreed to purchase for $46 million Tulsa, Okla.-based Tempo Enterprises, owner of Tempo Television cable network, which has up to 7 million subscribers in 650 cable systems. Detractors latched onto this deal in calling a halt to TCI's growing concentration of power in both subscriber volume and content. The deal would give TCI control of the satellite that beams Turner Broadcasting System's WTBS superstation (TCI is a 12% owner of TBS).

Theoretically, TCI could fill channel capacity on the satellite with the various TBS networks, according to competitors.

TCI then leased Tempo TV channel to General Electric's NBC, which will provide a business news service from 6 a.m. to 8 p.m. on the network beginning in early 1989. Night-time sports programming also is planned.

Indicative of the growth in cable revenues is the movement in monthly revenues per subscriber—from an average $22.46 in 1986 to $24.56 in 1987 to $25.70 in 1988, according to Larry Gerbrandt, senior analyst for Paul Kagan Associates, who credits the rise partly to the deregulation of basic services.

Cablevision Systems Corp., whose revenues soared to $300 million, up 98.7% from the previous year, recorded one of the highest subscriber revenue counts—$34.98—among the 45 cable companies. Cablevision has grown through acquisition to such an extent that its revenues in 1987 would be $413.8 million on a pro forma basis (as if it held its current properties since January, 1986), compared with $351.6 million in 1986. Cablevision Systems made one of the largest buys within the last 12 months in purchasing Adams-Russell Co., Waltham, Mass., for $474.4 million this January.

Cable has proved a highly innovative medium—in the right hands. Whereas the videotex experiments launched with great fanfare by newspapers failed, video shopping at home is thriving. Two of these media companies vaulted high into the top 100 in 1987.

Home Shopping Network, which cracked the list last year, jumped from 80th to 26th, by virtue of a revenue swing from $160.2 million to $582.1 million in 1987. The St. Petersburg, Fla.-based company also bought 11 stations in 1987 to expand its network. Plymouth, Minn.-based CVN Cos., formerly called C.O.M.B. Co., came out of nowhere to record revenues of $196.2 million for only eight months of activity in 1987. Revenues were from its Cable Value Network. CVN during the year purchased the 50% it did not own in the network from cable operators.

Cable is becoming even more important to advertisers who not only want segmented audiences but mass numbers. Upfront time buying of cable networks has been heavy this year, partly as a response to TV audience decline and a 20% fourth-quarter price increase by the broadcast networks. Such buying will help push up cable ad revenues to $1.45 billion in 1988, according to Paul Kagan Associates.

Cable officials say the demand for time on networks like CNN, ESPN, WTBS and USA Network is at a premium. Deals are being cut for time blocks up to six months before airing because advertisers see the time blocks evaporating and want the preferred price that goes with upfront buying.

Of the big networks, Capital Cities/ABC's ESPN in particular has flourished in this seller's market. ESPN in 1987 drew $123.9 million in total advertising, up 28.7% over the prior year, according to Broadcast Advertisers Reports. ■

What is media?

> "Medium . . . any means, agency or instrumentality; specifically, a means of communication that reaches the general public and carries advertising . . ."
> Webster's New World Dictionary, Second College Edition

Webster's definition leaves more questions than answers.

Traditional media—newspaper, magazine, TV, radio, outdoor and direct mail—made up the lion's share of ad budgets less than 15 years ago. These days, package-goods companies and other advertisers often spend as less than one-third of their total ad expenditures here, industry sources say.

Growing promotion, couponing and retail trade budgets are contributing enormous revenues to other marketing industries—bringing new companies into consideration in AD AGE's ranking of 100 media leaders.

Is packaging a medium? Are the number of retail shelf facings of a given product for which a marketer may or may not have paid? What about a promotional concert?

Not yet. At least not for the purposes of this ranking.

AA's definition of media comes down to this: The dissemination of information, editorial or advertising, through subscription or otherwise.

This broader definition leaves the door open to total market coverage units within newspaper companies, free-standing insert companies and home shopping networks.

Also merged into the list are subscription-based information services, specialty advertising calendars and ticker machines.

In some cases, specialty computer transmission and receiving equipment revenues are also included, because—as with Reuters—revenues from this hardware are inseparable from the media service it handles.

Although the availability of revenue figures never has been a criteria for inclusion in this ranking—46 companies on this year's list are private and AA estimates their media revenues—Yellow Pages companies are excluded from the ranking because comparable directory revenue figures are nearly impossible to obtain. A separate ranking of these companies appears on Page S-4.

Still on the doorstep, but not included in AA's interpretation of media, are program production where it can be extracted from broadcasting, motion pictures, syndication activities, book publishing, and advertising rep sales made to non-owned broadcast stations.

The definition of media is continually being rewritten—by skywriting over crowded beaches, movie previews in videocassette rentals and TV-equipped grocery carts.

Disney Co., and the sale of WGMS/WGMS-FM in Bethesda, Md./Washington.

Taft Broadcasting, No. 48 a year ago, liquidated and in the process spawned two new media companies. No. 100 TVX Broadcast Group, Virginia Beach, Va., bought five Taft independent major markets stations for $233.8 million, pushing its revenue from $23 million in 1986 to $133.4 million this year.

The Taft split also left many of the properties in the hands of No. 77 Great American Communications Co. in Cincinnati, including 15 radio properties and five TV affiliates.

Kohlberg Kravis Roberts & Co., a New York investment company, found buyers for the seven Miami-based Storer Communications properties it bought in 1985. Gillett Holdings, No. 49, bought its way onto the chart by taking six of them for $1.33 billion—the biggest TV buy of the year.

The acquisition at the time upped the Gillett TV property count to 17, five more than the recently liberalized 12 permitted by the FCC. Gillett moved five TV units into Busse Broadcasting, Green Bay, Wis., a trust for the children of George N. Gillett Jr., chairman of Gillett Holdings. In July 1987, Mr. Gillett purchased 79% of WTVT, CBS affiliate in Tampa for $365 million from Opubco's Gaylord Broadcasting. His partner in the deal, Clarence V. McKee, a Washington communications attorney, was given 52% voting control.

General Electric knew when it bought NBC that it would be forced to sell radio stations in the same markets as NBC's owned-and-operated TV stations, because the grandfather clause allowing NBC to have multiple ownership in the same market was non-transferable. GE this February sold five NBC units for $121.5 million to Emmis Broadcasting, Indianapolis. Stations included WNBC/WYNY-FM in New York, KYUU-FM in San Francisco, WKQX-FM in Chicago and WJIB-FM in Boston.

To comply with FCC cross-ownership rules Gannett sold WCZY AM/FM in Detroit. It owns the Detroit News.

McClatchy Newspapers bowed out of broadcast with the sale of two AM/FM combo stations. It also divested its cable properties on the road to returning to its founding as a newspaper company.

MAXWELL'S MARKET SHARES

Coolers have chilling effect on wine sales

By JOHN C. MAXWELL JR.

Wine consumption dropped by a modest 0.5% last year, mostly because of a significant slowdown in wine cooler sales.

Growth in the wine market during the past few years has been essentially due to the introduction of wine coolers. If wine cooler sales were excluded, the basic wine business was down about 4% in 1985, 5.6% in 1986 and 0.3% in 1987.

Wine coolers, which made up about 18.3% of total shipments in 1987, declined by 1% in 1987, to 105.7 million gallons (21.9% of the total domestic wine market) from 106.8 million (22% of the total domestic wine market) in 1986. They likely will be down in the order of 10% in 1988.

With this downturn, it's expected that the wine cooler market will again be shaken up by major players competing for share.

In 1986, four brands (E&J Gallo Winery's Bartles & James, Brown-Forman Co.'s California Cooler, Canandaigua Wine Co.'s Sun Country and Jos. E. Seagram & Sons' Seagram coolers) together took 70% of the market.

During 1987, it appears that out of these four leaders, only Seagram showed any growth (gaining nearly 16 market share points). However, these four brands still managed to maintain 70% of total market share.

Thus, 1987 was another year of stiff, relentless competition in the cooler industry, supported by huge ad budgets and innovative marketing tactics.

As a result, profit margins are being questioned because the cooler industry in 1987 spent more per case on advertising than any other alcoholic beverage.

The huge spending of the past few years is expected to gradually slow down. However, there will be continued introduction of new flavors and reformulated blends, packaging and market positioning.

Already, witness the new array of flavors, California Cooler's new formulation that eliminates pulpy residue and the entrance by Miller Brewing Co. with its Matilda Bay cooler, a clear, non-carbonated cooler made from Australian wine and fruit flavors.

Varietels have day in sun

The second factor to affect the wine industry was the excellent sales growth in premium varietal wines. The growth in this segment was a major contributor to the 2.1% increase in the overall domestic wine market.

Domestic ultrapremium (more than $14 per bottle), superpremium ($7 to $14) and premium ($3 to $7) table wine segments are estimated to be 20% of the table wine volume and 45% of its dollar sales.

This growth in the premium varietal wines would appear to indicate that though the industry isn't dramatically expanding the overall base of wine drinkers, the wine drinkers are maturing and moving upscale on their purchases.

The growth on the premium end of the sparkling wine segment must also be noted, as this growth seems to indicate consumers' fondness for cold, carbonated and sweet beverages.

Elsewhere in the domestic wine segment, it appears per capita wine consumption reached its peak in 1985 and has since been declining. This decline is expected to be accelerated by the decline in wine coolers.

The breakdown of domestic wine by type seems to have remained relatively stable, with white wine maintaining a 71.3% market share; red, 13.7%; and rose, 15.0%.

European decline continues

The third factor that affected the wine industry in 1987 was the continuing volume decline of European wines as their prices continued to increase.

In 1987, the industry witnessed greater than an 11% decline in imports, with a 25.2% decline in volume of German wines and a 22.5% decline in volume of French wines.

Although this 11% decline is an improvement from 1986's 20% drop, this area continues to feel the pressure of the declining dollar, which puts imports at a price disadvantage.

In 1987, all of the five major importing countries posted declines. With the improved quality and value of domestic wines, this situation is likely to continue.

But the magnitude of this situation depends on what currencies do. In 1987, imports were down in nearly every category except other fermented alcoholic beverages (including fruit-flavor wines and wines with less than 7% alcohol).

In company rankings, Gallo increased market share to about 30%, again maintaining the No. 1 position in the domestic wine market.

In the rest of the wine industry, witness the continuing trend of buyouts in 1987.

An example is Canandaigua's acquisitions of Widmer's Wine Cellars and Monarch Wine Co., including its Manischewitz brand.

The diversion of marketing dollars to coolers; the decreased shelf space available for wine, also due to coolers; and the increase in packaging and wine costs have forced California wineries into a fight for market share.

The principal question concerning the wine business in 1988 centers on the fate of the wine cooler segment.

Companies likely will continue to establish their positions as the market starts to settle down.

It's estimated that the domestic wine market will have moderate growth, again fueled by the premium varietal wines and premium sparkling wines.

The import market is expected to have continuing but slightly moderate decline, and the wine cooler segment will have a possible 10% decline.

Overall, the wine market likely will remain relatively flat or post a modest 1% to 2% decline.#

Hill Holliday wins big

Drives away with Infiniti

By CLEVELAND HORTON
and GARY LEVIN

Nissan Motor Corp. USA last week served up its $60 million Infiniti car account to Hill, Holliday, Connors, Cosmopulos, and it was the depth of that shop's strategic planning that did it.

Nissan's new luxury-car division selected Hill Holliday, one of the hottest creative agencies on the East Coast, within hours after the Bloom Agency, Dallas, delivered its losing presentation June 30.

"It was a lot closer than Nissan," said David Hubbard, Infiniti's national advertising manager, referring to last year's review of Nissan's main $150 million account, which went to Chiat/Day, one of the West Coast's top creative agencies.

Mr. Hubbard called agency President-CEO John "Jack" M. Connors Jr. early Friday morning to tell him—in a sportsmanlike fashion by the Laker fan—that "The Celtics lost, but you won."

The Boston-based agency's first order of business will be setting up a Los Angeles office. And agency executives say they plan to staff the new office locally.

"Realistically, we're committed to supervising the launch of this car from the Boston office," Mr. Connors said, adding that launch advertising will be developed there, too.

But "by Jan. 1, we'll have 40 or 50 people in Los Angeles," and "once the launch advertising is produced, the L.A. creative team will kick in."

Mr. Hubbard said he's satisfied that Hill Holliday will "transplant the culture" of the agency's headquarters to the West Coast before the late 1989 introduction of the division's first two cars, a luxury sedan and a performance coupe.

Initially, the new office will be run by a transition team led by Dennis Farrington, senior VP (account service), and Chuck Kushell, senior VP (direct marketing). Several senior-level agency executives will visit Nissan's Carson, Calif., headquarters July 7 to discuss staffing needs.

Mr. Hubbard consistently downplayed the importance of creative in the Saatchi builds its third major national shop

By JON LAFAYETTE
and RAYMOND SERAFIN

The merger of Campbell-Mithun and William Esty Co. gives Saatchi & Saatchi Co. a major national agency with roots in America's heartland.

The move, announced last week, is part of a trend of midsize or regionally based agencies embarking on new corporate strategies to boost growth.

The new agency, Campbell-Mithun-Esty, will have billings of $800 million, placing it among the nation's top 20 agencies. Based in Minneapolis, Campbell-Mithun's home, it has full-service offices there and in Detroit, Chicago and New York, Esty's base. It also has 24 field offices.

"Look at the map—it's a good-looking resource," said Joseph O'Donnell, 48, the ceo of Esty who becomes chairman of the new agency. "To be a player in today's world, broad resources are the entry point."

London-based Saatchi often talked about seeking other acquisitions in the Midwest but had little success establishing a bigger presence.

Individually, the two agencies were too small to compete effectively for major new-business opportunities, executives said.

Bill Dunlap, the Campbell-Mithun chairman-ceo who becomes ceo of the new agency, said the merged shop will have a national presence and "give us a chance to attract other types of clients."

Saatchi & Saatchi briefly had a second outpost in Chicago, through

FTC centers its sights on slotting allowances

By LAURIE FREEMAN and JUDANN DAGNOLI

WASHINGTON—The Federal Trade Commission is investigating retail slotting allowances, the controversial fees that supermarkets charge package-goods marketers to place new products on their stores' shelves.

An FTC spokeswoman said the regulatory agency is pulling together a research paper on the issue, which is standard procedure when the FTC is unfamiliar with a marketing technique or practice.

The research paper, a possible first step before a full-scale investigation, will be completed next month.

So-called slotting allowances only recently have become a major issue for marketers. The practice, once limited to Northeastern grocery chains, has spread nationwide in recent years, industry executives say.

Retailers say they were forced to resort to the fees by the unrelenting pace of new-product introductions.

The FTC declined further comment on its activity in this area, but this is one form of government regulation that many marketers would welcome.

"The situation is like the Hatfields and the McCoys," said Richard Furash, a partner in the Bos-

Riney quits Anheuser-Busch; Stroh deal could be brewing

SAN FRANCISCO—Hal Riney & Partners has resigned its Anheuser-Busch business and sources say the agency may be poised to take on assignments from Stroh Brewery Co. Riney's resignation of A-B, confirmed by the brewer on Friday, came after sharp cutbacks in the agency's work and repeated turndowns on pleas for new business. A-B said Riney resigned the business "to pursue other competitive accounts."

Sources said Stroh, the nation's No. 3 beer marketer, will shift a

Tracy-Locke pumps regional

By JENNIFER LAWRENCE

DALLAS—Tracy-Locke, poised to become Omnicom Group's third major agency, is positioning itself as a unique regional marketing network.

In the first indication of a corporate strategy, Phil Slott, the agency's chairman-chief creative officer—and part owner—said Tracy-Locke's 22 field offices are the agency's "major point of difference." T-L has full-service offices in Atlanta, Dallas and Los Angeles.

While marketers such as Campbell Soup Co., General Foods Corp. and Frito-Lay (a Tracy-Locke client) have undertaken regionalized marketing, agencies have been slower to establish regional networks to accommodate the approach, Mr. Slott said.

"Clients are light years down the road," he added.

Tracy-Locke has been in the forefront of regional marketing because of clients such as Taco Bell and Pepsi-Cola Bottling Group.

For example, the agency recently developed an image-oriented print campaign for Pepsi bottlers in Wichita, Kan., themed "Wichita's choice."

The effort features Wichita residents in settings throughout the city. The campaign is unusual because it isn't tied to a price promotion.

"Regional marketing is happening all over the world," Mr. Slott said. "We have a horizontal and vertical delivery system that takes the advertising message from the TV screen to the street. . . . The consumer sees a commercial, hears it on radio, reads it in a magazine but also may see it on the back of a bus or on a table card."

Tracy-Locke has bred a corporate culture tuned to regional marketing, said Howard Davis, president-ceo and also a part owner. "It's not just opening up offices. It's local marketing at the shirt-sleeve level."

Howard Davis (r.) and Phil Slott tune into regional marketing.

Tracy-Locke will target new-business prospects in the package goods, durables and corporate categories, Mr. Slott said.

Omnicom, the holding company for BBDO Worldwide and DDB Needham Worldwide, last week confirmed it had sold a minority share of Tracy-Locke to a small group of the agency's executives—including Messrs. Davis and Mr. Slott (AA, June 20).

Unlike WPP Group Chief Executive Martin Sorrell, who refused to sell Lord, Geller, Federico, Einstein, New York, to its principals, Omnicom CEO Allen Rosenshine was able to keep Tracy-Locke in the Omnicom fold.

The "Rosenshine solution," based on flexible ownership, is aimed at setting Tracy-Locke on an expansion course that includes acquisitions, the opening of a New York office and a worldwide presence.

Initially, Omnicom will keep an 80% share of Tracy-Locke. Specific terms weren't disclosed, but Tracy-Locke executives will be limited to no more than 20% ownership. If they sell that 20% or any portion, it must be to Omnicom.

Frito expands regional marketing (P. 21), while Campbell adds local agencies (P. 38).

This sets the stage for growth through acquisition because Omnicom is willing to further reduce its equity position to put equity into the hands of another partner, Mr. Rosenshine said.

A timetable for such a move hasn't been set, but a major acquisition may occur this year, he added.

"We would use our equity to help fund a merger," said Mr. Rosenshine, adding that discussions have been held with several New York agencies.

Tracy-Locke now becomes a

New TV fare puts upfront in confusion

By VERNE GAY and RUTH STROUD

NEW YORK—The network TV upfront market is in its most confused state since last year's introduction of people meters wreaked havoc on this critical sales period.

The confusion has been caused by a network scramble for substitute programming—such as revisions of old, canceled series—for fall, in response to the 18-week-old Writers Guild of America strike.

Following NBC's bold, and what some agency executives called "brilliant," move to insert original prime-time programming to justify higher asking prices, ABC and CBS are mustering forces to line up their own new shows to stay in the market pricewise.

As early as this week, both networks could announce that they, too, will have fresh programs this fall. Peter Tortorici, CBS VP-planning and scheduling, said, "We want to [announce a strike schedule] as soon as possible . . . to be responsive to the marketplace."

Ted Harbert, VP-prime time at ABC, said in a statement, "We are working on plans now and will announce them shortly."

NBC's dramatic 11th-hour move came just as an already delayed sales season was beginning. In one bold stroke, the No. 1 network essentially is telling agency buyers that since its programming will be new, prices should reflect that.

The so-called upfront buys—when advertisers make their network buys for the fourth quarter and first three quarters of the following year—typically are made just before the Fourth of July. But the high drama in Hollywood has upset everything.

Because advertisers base their buys—and networks, their prices—on viewing estimates, it's critical that both parties reach some agreement on what those will be.

That's been virtually impossible. Because the networks' program plans have changed almost daily—and will change even more radically this week—no one knows what viewing levels will be. For example,

PM's smoker ads fire up opponents

By JUDANN DAGNOLI

Anti-smoking groups, Washington legislators and even public relations experts are up in arms over Philip Morris Cos.' new campaign to convince lawmakers and the public not to mess with smokers.

The reaction has caused many to believe that the $5 million public relations effort is backfiring.

The print ads, headlined "The American smoker—an economic force," broke last week. They portray smokers as a force with formidable financial clout.

Created by PM's public affairs department and Reuben M. Smith Associates, Nashville, Tenn., the campaign is based on Roper Organization data and targets the automobile, travel, electronics, restaurant and sports industries. The headlines make such assertions as "More than 24 million of this country's smokers will travel this summer. Make room, America!" (See related story on Page 8.)

In the automotive ad, Philip Morris claims the number of U.S. smokers, who own enough cars to "stretch bumper to bumper around the world four times, is too much horsepower to ignore."
